The Double Squeeze

BULLETIN

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Feb. 25 (AP)—American infantry troops, medium tanks and combat engineers occupied the Kasserine Pass today, meeting virtually no opposition.

By Daniel De Luce

Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Feb. 25.—Allied armies on the offensive with strong air cover in both western and southern Tunisia slashed through the Axis rear guard in Kasserine Pass to night and penetrated advance positions on the edge of the Mareth Line.

Under the field command of Gen. Sir Harold Alexander, British and American forces were declared to have launched the long-awaited double squeeze on the Axis bridgehead in North Africa.

Kasserine Pass, from which Marshal Erwin Rommel last Sunday threatened to break into Algeria, was being savagely cleared of the last Axis defenses, while to the east Allied planes loosed a deadly air barrage on the enemy's rear, striking his airfields, supply depots and transport columns.

The Axis still is getting big numbers of troops and supplies. Canadian Press correspondent Ross Munro reported from field headquarters. He said an American pilot patrolling the Sicilian Straits saw large enemy convoys steaming toward Tunisia and that the pilot had seen 40 large German transport planes landing troops at Bizerte.

Berlin Admin Withdrawal

(The Berlin military commentator, Capt. Ludwig Sertorius, broadcast that German and Italian troops in middle Tunisia were "breaking contact with the enemy" and being withdrawn to position favorable both for defense and attack. He declared that British and French troops were replacing Americans all along the line and made the wholly unsupported claim that Marshal Rommel had "completely crushed" three American divisions.

(The report added that Lieut. Gen. K. A. N. Anderson had had his British First Army lined up for an assault on Bizerte and Tunis and that Rommel had upset his timetable by forcing him to send troops to parry the thrusts in the central section.)

Allied tank columns and infantry were reported threatening German positions at Sbeitla and Ousseltia above the Kasserine Gap. Thus, instead of Rommel assuming a dominating position on the Algerian frontier, dispatches showed he was being compelled to pull back his shattered armor to

Rommel Sought to Use Hills As Wall, Turn to Hit 8th Army

By Ross Munro

Canadian Press War Correspondent

Allied Field Headquarters in North Africa, Feb. 25 (AP)—The Allies are breathing easier in North Africa now with the Axis withdrawing from the Kasserine Pass, but it is a puzzling game the enemy is playing.

This narrow gap with steep, granite hills rising 4000 to 5000 feet on either side is the key to the southern Tunisian front and the German withdrawal from this ground comes almost as much of a surprise as was the sudden loss of the pass last Saturday.

The enemy seems to have gambled on pushing his initial tank attack far enough west from Kasserine Gap to enable him to consolidate positions in the line of hills stretching from the Leptis plains north to the Ousseltia Valley. By holding these positions the enemy might then have withdrawn his armored strength to meet the expected attack by the British Eighth Army from the Mareth line area.

Now it looks as if the enemy's gamble to gain the hills and protect his western flank for the inevitable battle with the Eighth Army has failed. He is giving up the hill positions.

Possibly the Eighth Army advance is more imminent than was realized at first and the Germans are being forced to regroup in battle formation on the plains east of Kasserine to the sea. It is there that the decisive engagements probably will take place.

Nobody here is forgetting the heroic defense British troops have put up before Thala, a defense that prevented a German breakthrough. I was in Thala during some of the most critical hours and it was nip and tuck as to whether the British line would hold, but the British tanks, infantry and artillery stuck it out. Several times the sweating Tummies in the line thought they might have to withdraw. They gave way a bit, only to attack time and again against crack German panzer divisions like the Tenth and Twenty-first.

After their defeat on the Kasserine Pass last Saturday, the Americans have shown amazing recuperative power. They drew back on the plain west of the gap, snapped back into battle formations and struck eastward again to take back lost ground.

There was a thundering fight on the plain with the Germans throwing in 40 to 60 of the tanks they had available in this sector.

But the Germans could not crack this American line any more than they could the British line at Thala on the northern flank. Out on the plain the enemy also left himself wide open for air attack and although the weather was bad, Moscow, Feb. 25.—The Russians captured another town west of Kharkov and several on the approaches to Orel north of Kursk and doggedly advanced in the bitterly contested Donets Basin despite repeated German counterattacks in the mud, the Soviet command announced today.

Nearly 2000 enemy troops were reported killed in the continuing day and night battles from the region of Orel at the hinge of the German central and southern fronts to the Krasnodar region of the western Caucasus where more than a battalion of 800 Germans were wiped out.

The Russians said they were fighting in deep mud in the Ukraine and north Caucasus as they pounded toward the German Dnieper River line and in heavy snow in the Orel and Kursk Provinces.

Nazis Claim Victory

(The Germans said they had crushed a Russian tank army between the Dnieper and Dnepro River and annihilated the Soviet Seventh Guard Cavalry Corps behind the Mius River west of Rostov, capturing Gen. Borisov and his staff. Wave after wave of Russian attacks were reported along the central and northern fronts. The Germans said they destroyed 104 tanks and 54 planes.)

Amid indications that the Administration is willing to recede from its position that food prices to consumers must not go up, the Senate yesterday passed legislation forcing higher ceilings on prices of many farm products.

Sponsored by Senator Bankhead (Democrat) of Alabama, the measure directs that no account shall be taken of Government benefit payments when farm price ceilings are established—this cancelling effect of the clause in the executive stabilization order that "appropriate deductions" for benefit payments be made.

Both friends and foes of the Administration voted for the measure, only Senators Gerry and Green—Democrats from Rhode Island—voting in the negative. Democratic Leader Barkley of Kentucky said he supported the legislation "with some trepidation."

Ursula Parrott and Deserter Met Like Lovers, Says Major

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Feb. 25.—An all male jury heard evidence today that Ursula Parrott and Pvt. Michael Neely Bryan "appeared to be making love" in the rear seat of the novelist's automobile shortly before they sped out of a Miami Beach Army stockade where the soldier was confined.

Maj. Walter S. Danuser, officer in charge of the stockade, told of events preceding the flight, which led to charges against Mrs. Parrott of aiding and concealing a deserter and impairing the loyalty and discipline of the armed forces. For four consecutive days, he said, the author paid 20-minute visits to Bryan, who was confined for being absent without leave.

On the fifth day, December 28, Mrs. Parrott and the soldier spent about two hours together, seated in the rear of her automobile. Major Danuser said he twice went to the door of his office to see whether they still were in the car.

Danuser had gone home when a stockade check disclosed that Bryan was missing.

Attorney Bart A. Riley worked carefully to build a defense against both the desertion and the subversive activity charges.

He informed the jury he would show that Bryan actually was given a one-year sentence by the Army for breaking confinement, and not for desertion, and consequently Mrs. Parrott could not legally be accused of assisting a deserter.

Riley also directed his questioning to show that Mrs. Parrott, with the unwitting help of Bryan, had been a big factor in the smashing of a marijuana ring in New York.

The first prosecution witness, A. L. Rathel, Miami narcotics agent, told a story which accented the author's part in preliminary work

Office of Price Administration Chief Prentiss M. Brown stated yesterday that he "strongly approved" of the District's "special ration board arrangements" for congressmen, adding that he thought criticism of members of Congress "for utilizing such a service is, in my judgment, unjustified."

Brown stated that he knew nothing of the special board until its existence was disclosed yesterday morning—in The Post.

"No member of Congress has received any ration allowance that any other citizen of this country could not have received under equal circumstances," Brown said in a formal statement.

He vigorously defended the special ration setup which has been located in the Free School, 1740 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest, since last summer as a "convenience" and time-saver for congressmen.

OPA officials objected to references to the special ration setup as "mysterious" or "phantom," but until the disclosure of its existence yesterday, no public announcement had ever been made concerning it, and another local ration board—the one serving Bethesda, Md.—had tried for months to obtain official information.

R.A.F. Believed Raiding Italy And Germany

London (Friday), Feb. 25 (AP)—Waves of Britain's heaviest bombers swept across the Straits of Dover for 45 minutes last night, followed by the sudden shutting off of Axis radio stations on the Continent and an alert in Switzerland which usually means both Germany and Italy are being attacked.

The silencing of radio stations from Denmark through Germany hinted that the Reich was feeling the might of the R. A. F. for the seventeenth time this month—a new record.

A dispatch from Zurich, Switzerland, said a great number of heavy bombers flew south of Lugano last night, indicating Allied air forces were again blasting Italy on a heavy scale. Lugano is 40 miles northwest of Milan.

The Axis radio shutdowns were on a bigger scale than last night when Canadian bombers carried out their greatest attack of the war on the German naval base of Wilhelmshaven.

Investigators from the House Military Affairs Committee were checking draft deferments of Federal employees at local selective headquarters yesterday preparatory to making a preliminary report today at an executive session of the special subcommittee headed by Representative Costello (Democrat) California.

Costello said last night the investigation was aimed, not at discovering and making public individual names, but rather at learning the policy of each agency of the Government in regard to draft deferments.

He said he did not know whether the investigation, which he hopes

D. C. Induction Rate Sets U. S. Record

On a total registration basis, Washingtonians are going into the armed forces at a rate faster than that of any average American community, District Selective Service headquarters announced yesterday.

Post files reveal that the 1943 rate of induction here is more than 24 times that of November, 1940. For example, in January this year 1230 men were called to active duty, while in November of 1940 only 51 men were inducted. The rate of induction is expected to be held to 1200 per month until the manpower pool runs dry, it was reported.

In February, so far, 909 men have been inducted.

will cover not only Washington but Government employment throughout the country, including Navy yards and arsenals, will disclose 1000 or 100,000 draft dodgers.

Costello said that if investigation showed that any agency was asking deferments for men who could be replaced, either by men ineligible for the draft or by women, with a month's training, it would be recommended that deferments be canceled and the men replaced.

He said his committee intended to gather facts on just how essential each man was whose deferment had been requested with a view to seeing that only draft-eligible men who could not be replaced were given deferments. As examples of those draft-eligibles he considered irreplaceable, Costello mentioned "particularly able chemists and physicists."

New Program to Lift Output At Least 20%, Nelson Says

By Ben W. Gilbert

Post Staff Writer

War Production Chief Donald M. Nelson yesterday told reporters that the program of "production planning" which the War Production Board is working out will provide 20 per cent greater production than would otherwise be forthcoming.

He coupled this announcement with a statement that we had the productive capacity to equip an armed force of 11 millions by the end of this year—the size currently mentioned as the goal of the chiefs of staff.

Nelson—speaking at a joint press conference with his vice chairman, Charles E. Wilson—stated that it would not be necessary to reduce the civilian economy to bedrock, although some reduction in civilian services would be needed.

Nelson and Wilson were thus presenting publicly for the first time their side of the recent "difference of opinion" with the armed forces which ended in the dismissal of WPB Vice Chairman Ferdinand Eberstadt—namely that their plans will produce more.

"Planning is the keynote," Wilson said. "If we can flow the raw materials and components more smoothly, we can increase output. There are many places where I know we can increase output if we get the material there. We have got to do these things to reach the production goals."

Nelson added that increased production would mean "more efficient use of manpower."

Wilson said that he was "resorting to expedients" to increase the production of aluminum extrusions, which are "very tight," to keep aircraft production up.

Wilson, former president of the General Electric Co., explained that his drastic order which precipitated the conflict with Eberstadt telling all contractors to get orders for critical components on their books for the whole year without delay had secured "the results we wanted."

"We got facts instead of opinions," Wilson said. "The orders have been pretty well placed."

Nelson stated that he listened to a number of "rumors" during the past few weeks, including rumors that he was going to resign. He declared flatly that he never had any thoughts of resigning and did not plan to resign now.

"The boys on Guadalcanal cannot resign," he said. "I'll admit that I have a job that I cannot be happy with over a period of time, but I have got to go on and do the job."

A reporter then asked Nelson to explain why he dismissed Eber-

4,750,000 Men Abroad in '44 Seen U. S. Goal

Also Air Force Equal To Full Plane Power Of All Axis Nations

By Ernest B. Vaccaro

Associated Press Staff Writer

A new picture of America's growing military might was studied by Congress yesterday with a disclosure the Army contemplates an air force equal to the entire aerial strength of the Axis nations by the end of 1943, and a total overseas force of 4,750,000 men by the close of 1944.

Testimony by Maj. Gen. I. H. Edwards, Assistant Chief of Staff, that Army strength overseas will total 2,700,000 at the end of this year was made before a Senate Appropriations Subcommittee, revealing an "upward revision" of a previous estimate of 2,500,000.

Publication of Edwards' testimony, given in executive session, was permitted after he had been allowed to go over the transcript and eliminate material he desired to keep "off the record."

The new estimates, Edwards told the committee exploring the manpower situation, are based on a study of the shipping situation by a combined shipping committee of Army, Navy and other United States agencies in cooperation with the British.

Rate of Sinking Improved

"The rate of sinkings is improved and we certainly hope it will be improved more, because we have taken every measure," the Army and Navy combined told everything they can to reduce that rate," he testified.

Workers Urged to Use Autos, Lighten Trolley-Bus Burden

By the Associated Press

New York, Feb. 25.—Joseph B. Eastman, director of the Office of Defense Transportation, today told a group of traffic experts that proper use of the privately-owned automobile offered the only solution to the serious employee transportation problem.

"There is a tendency on the part of quite a number of car owners," said Eastman, "to feel that the patriotic thing for them to do is to lay their cars up or use them as little as possible and ride the buses or streetcars in going to and from work. Others do the same thing for the less worthy motive of saving their gasoline for pleasure driving."

"It is important that the car owners should understand that the public transportation systems have a terrific load to carry and that they need all the help the private automobiles can give them."

The ODT director urged that these automobiles be continued in

Treasury Department Files to Intervene In Next Hearings

By Roger Young

With the threat of public ownership of the Potomac Electric Power Co. unless demands for rate reduction were met, the Federal Government yesterday made plain its intention to regulate public utilities in the District of Columbia.

Such intention, implied throughout the months of struggle between the local Public Utilities Commission and the OPA over the still pending gas-rate case, was made unmistakable when the far more powerful Treasury Department, filing for intervention in the electric rate hearings to begin Tuesday morning, demanded abrogation of the sliding scale rate-finding agreement between the company and FUC.

An OPA petition for intervention, which had been generally anticipated, reached the District Building a few hours after Secretary of Treasury Morgenthau had told his press conference that he would seek lower power rates, not only for the Government, Peppo's largest consumer, but for the entire consumer population of Washington.

Almost simultaneous with the filing of the two petitions was the appearance of the Congressional Record for Wednesday, in which was inserted an attack on the electric company by Representative John E. Rankin (Democrat) of Mississippi. Disclosing that he had written the President requesting

Union Sets Sunday Night Deadline For WLB Decision On Pay Demands

The War Labor Board was scheduled to meet today, faced by a threat of a general strike in the Nation's aircraft industry unless it acts promptly to grant requested wage increases.

The threat was issued yesterday at a mass meeting in Seattle, Wash., which halted production in two Boeing bomber plants for several hours while A. F. of L. workers voted to call out other parts of the West Coast aircraft industry in successive stages to hold "24-hour" protest meetings if the WLB failed to act, with general "24-hour" meetings of the whole industry to be called if action on wage increase demands was not forthcoming by next Wednesday midnight.

The Associated Press reported that Boeing officials at the Seattle and nearby Renton plants stated that 97 per cent of the day shift left work during lunch periods to attend the meeting, requiring the plants to be shut down at noon, but that most of the shift due between 3 and 4 p. m. reported for work. Absenteeism of about 23 per cent of the night shift was reported.

Not Yet at 'Voting Stage'

WLB Public Member Wayne L. Morse said the board had been considering the case involving demands of West Coast aircraft workers for wage increases, but that the board had not reached the "voting stage."

"I expect it will take the next few days for the board to render its decision," Morse said. "Meanwhile, the board does not propose to be influenced by any stoppage of work."

Pointing out that he was speaking only for himself, Morse added: "My past record of work on arbitration cases has shown that I do not believe that a work stoppage while a case is being considered on its merits can be countenanced."

There were indications that further work stoppages would have the effect of impeding, rather than accelerating the board's procedures, since WLB has followed the general rule of refusing to decide the "merits" of a labor dispute "unless the workers return to their jobs and remain at work."

Parade Through Streets

The mass meeting ended in a procession through the business district, with some 10,000 marchers, the Associated Press said.

The unionists, who are asking that their present base starting pay of 62½ cents an hour be increased to 95 cents an hour, received a telegram from Brig. Gen. Charles E. Branshaw, district supervisor for the Army Air Forces at Santa Monica, Calif., in which he said:

"I would be derelict in my duty . . . if I did not emphatically protest this action taken by members of your union, which is in direct violation of a solemn pledge that there would be no work stoppage for the duration of the war."

"This action is little less than treasonable when it is considered that the Boeing Flying Fortresses . . . constitute one of our most effective striking weapons, without which we cannot hope to win the war."

The company complained that the "walkout" was contrary to previously arranged union plans, which contemplated no interruption of work. It had been arranged, the Boeing management asserted, that the meeting was to have started at 1 p. m. for the benefit of off-shift workers and was to have been held on until the day shift

Chinese in Lupao Japs Quitting Canton Rail Line Position

By the Associated Press
 Chungking, Feb. 25 (P).—A general Japanese withdrawal along the southern section of the Canton-Hankow railway is in progress. Chinese field dispatches reported tonight.

They said the Chinese had retaken Lupao, 25 miles northwest of Canton, on Tuesday and that the battered enemy forces retreated in the direction of Samshui, a river and railway town west of Canton, after a desperate rearguard action.

Chinese troops were reported to have passed Kuntien and pressed on toward Sunkai, a railway town 15 miles north of Canton, and one of the key points in the Japanese defense system around this great south China city.

Earlier today a Chinese army spokesman, reviewing the military situation, declared that "on the whole the Japanese have gained nothing recently from their widespread drives."

And the Chinese high command announced that while the Japanese are pressing their local offensives in at least four theaters in the Yangtze Valley and in the far southwest, most of these have been held or turned back.

A communique told of a Japanese attempt to cross the Yangtze in central Hupeh Province which was turned into a costly failure by Chinese artillery fire and air bombing. In western Yunnan Province a Japanese attempt to advance northward west of the Salween River was said to have been frustrated.

Definite Plan Needed

London, Feb. 25 (P).—Gen. Hsuing Shih-fel, head of a Chinese military mission, told a press conference today that the first thing necessary in the strategy of attacking Japan "is for the United Nations to get together and settle on some definite plan."

Any popular idea that a concerted assault on the Japanese can wait for destruction of Germany is mistaken, General Hsuing declared.

could join it after going off duty at mid-afternoon.

Boeing officials lodged protests with the Army Air Force and with Harvey W. Brown and James A. Duncan, officials of the A. F. of L. International Association of Machinists, with which the local union is affiliated.

The unionists resolved that: "If a directive is not issued on aircraft wages based on common sense and the conditions under which it was asked is not forthcoming before midnight Sunday, February 28, that Monday morning at 12:30 a. m., the first day of March, the members of the Aeronautical mechanics union will hold a 24-hour general meeting and will proceed to unfinished business and from then on will wait for the War Labor Board to give its decision."

"If the decision is not forthcoming by Monday, midnight, we will ask local 1125 (Burbank, Calif.) to call a similar meeting. If no decision is forthcoming by Tuesday midnight, we will ask Local 727 (Consolidated Aircraft, San Diego, Calif.) to take the same action."

"If no action is forthcoming by Wednesday midnight, we will ask that our international union call a general meeting of all aircraft generals."

"We also ask Washington Congressmen and Senators and the California congressional delegates to ask for an immediate audience with President Roosevelt and have him intercede and issue a directive to the WLB to stop considering crackpot recommendations of Paul Porter (WLB representative) and that a decision be handed down in keeping with the American way of life and standards of living."

Harold Gibson, president of the Aeronautical Mechanics Union district lodge, asserted, however, that no appeal for work stoppages would be involved in the calls for "24-hour meetings."

Gibson declared in announcing the mass meeting that the Labor Board has been "lulled to complacency through lack of physical demonstration by workers."

He added: "We're fed up. We're going to tell the WLB to get off the dime."

At Los Angeles, Dale Reed, president of Aeronautical Industry District Lodge 727, said last night that union members in the Lockheed plant would meet Sunday to consider action protesting asserted delay by the War Labor Board in determining wage scales for the Pacific Coast airplane industry.

Protesting the day shift's stop-work, the Boeing Co.'s statement asserted that "these persons who inspired the workers to forsake the Boeing's Flying Fortress production lines to attend a union meeting which they might have attended after shift are, in effect, taking direct action against our armed forces which so urgently need every day's production from the Boeing plants."

"The Boeing Co. reminds employees who left their work that each one of them has a direct responsibility to the men on the fighting fronts—men who have no choice but to do their jobs."

A special edition of the Aero Mechanic, union periodical, said the meeting had been demanded by shop chairmen, committee chairman and individual unionists.

Harold J. Gibson, district council president of the A. F. of L.-Affiliated Aeronautical Industrial District Council, said there was no desire to strike, but that the WLB had promised a decision last week in the long pending matter, and had again postponed it.

The company has expressed itself in favor of a general wage increase.

U. S. Fighters Shoot Down Six Nip Planes Attacking Air Base

By the Associated Press

New Delhi, Feb. 25.—The Allies scored two one-sided victories—one in the air and one in a commando-like ground attack—over the Japanese in India and Burma in the last three days, communique today disclosed.

The first was a surprise raid on the small Japanese occupied village of Myebon, about 60 miles southeast of Akyab in Burma, Monday night by raiders from Marshal Sir Archibald D. Wavell's forces. It was announced that all installations which had been useful to the enemy were destroyed.

The second success was scored by United States fighter planes of the Tenth Air Force, which rose to challenge 30 Japanese bombers and fighters which came over the Burmese mountains to strike at airfields in northeast Assam, India.

A United States headquarters communique said six enemy planes were shot down, 12 probably destroyed and others damaged. None of the American planes was even damaged.

The raid was the second directed against the same target in three days, the first also having failed to cause material damage.

United States fighters, doubling as light bombers, also were said to have wrecked spans of two bridges of value to the Japanese, coming back without a scratch. The targets were the 200-foot railroad bridge 10 miles west of Myitkyina and a 150-foot steel span six miles northeast of Pinbaw. Other bombers dropped explosives on the railway station and sidings at Thazi and on Akyab.

Employing the same tactics as Britain's famed commandos, Marshal Wavell's troops landed at Myebon from vessels of the Royal Indian Navy coastal forces, the communique said, "and remained in possession of the place about 5 hours."

"All buildings which had been useful to the enemy were burned, the Jetty was blown up and a 100-foot river steamer was destroyed," it continued. "The opposition was very slight and quickly overcome. The raiders suffered no casualties."

NEW GAINS—Russians yesterday battered their way into another city west of Kharkov, apparently in the Sumy-Lebedin sector (2) and slaying about 200 Germans in a fight for a town near Maloarkhangelsk (1). Strong German counterattacks (3) were felt, however, north of Stalino and the Rostov vicinity branded as "unscrupulous fabrications." German claims of capturing 5,400,000 Russians and killing or wounding 12,800,000.

"If this were true, how could the Red army within the last three months inflict a number of grave defeats on the German Fascist army, liberate from the Fascist invaders 14 regions, territories and autonomous republics, rout 112 enemy divisions, take over 300,000 war prisoners, destroy or capture 7000 German tanks, 4000 planes, 17,000 guns and a large quantity of other arms?" the Soviet information bureau asked in a communique.

In the fighting west of Rostov, Pravda reported large forces of German aviation thrown into the battle as the enemy strove desperately to hold an "important barrier."

The advancing Reds said they dislodged the Nazis from several lines of trenches and captured several important hills in stubborn hand-to-hand fighting. The Germans were said to have lost 21 planes in dogfights Wednesday.

Fresh concentrations of German tanks and reserves appeared throughout the Ukraine, Izvestia reported. Russian artillery me. and reduced the counterattacking enemy tanks and infantry.

Spitfires Wreck Trucks

The R. A. F. reported that Spitfires caught and destroyed three troop-laden trucks yesterday in the Kasserine area. When a second Spitfire formation dove to attack two other trucks, there were "no soldiers alive from the first trucks to fire at us," the report said.

Two A. F. Hurricanes shot up two trucks and some gun posts in the Kasserine area.

The German base at Sbeitla was being menaced by strong Allied patrols operating from the vicinity of Shiba to the northeast. French troops coming out of the mountains on the west side of the Ousseilia Valley smashed one after another of the enemy's positions in what was perhaps the beginning of a determined Allied drive in that sector.

The Germans were having difficulty in trying to halt the British advance guards thrusting into the gap east of Shiba.

At Kasserine itself, Rommel, unable to bring up sufficient reinforcements because of punishing and unending Allied attacks from the air, apparently was about to relinquish the whole of the vital pass.

At last report, British and American troops were mopping up the last Axis resistance in the pass, where already an Axis salient of some 8 miles had been wiped out.

The Allied air arm, which had fallen upon Rommel with crushing force in the retreat from the vicinity of Thala through the Kasserine, remained in strong action, running Rommel's casualties and losses in equipment to high figures.

The Allied communique announced that the main Axis airfield of Al Aouina in Tunisia, the southern terminus for the Axis air ferry route from Sicily and Italy, had been heavily hit.

Twenty-five to 30 enemy fighters rose to challenge the raiders. Seven Messerschmitts were shot down, as was a transport plane. In this and other sweeps six Allied planes were lost.

It was disclosed that French bombers had gone into action for the first time in this theater, flown by a veteran unit of the regular French air force.

(R. A. F. headquarters in Malta said torpedo planes had sunk a large supply ship, heavily damaged another and attacked an escorting destroyer north of Trapani, westernmost point in Sicily. Trains were attacked in Italy, Sicily and Tunisia and another convoy was assaulted north of Italian Cape Alice with undisclosed results.)

The Italian communique as heard here from the Rome radio tried to ignore the new situation in Tunisia, dismissing the Allied counterdrive as "local activity."

Spitfires Wreck Trucks

The R. A. F. reported that Spitfires caught and destroyed three troop-laden trucks yesterday in the Kasserine area. When a second Spitfire formation dove to attack two other trucks, there were "no soldiers alive from the first trucks to fire at us," the report said.

Two A. F. Hurricanes shot up two trucks and some gun posts in the Kasserine area.

The German base at Sbeitla was being menaced by strong Allied patrols operating from the vicinity of Shiba to the northeast. French troops coming out of the mountains on the west side of the Ousseilia Valley smashed one after another of the enemy's positions in what was perhaps the beginning of a determined Allied drive in that sector.

Envoys in Istanbul, Peace Rumors Fly

Roumanian Expected As Other Balkan Diplomats Gather

By Paul Kern Lee
 Associated Press Staff Writer

Istanbul, Feb. 25 (P).—This city, nearest neutral point to the Balkans, is a sounding board for the multiple peace rumors affecting Bulgaria, Rumania and Hungary.

One Hungarian official and two Bulgarian emissaries have arrived here; and there are rumors, as well as persistent denials in well informed quarters, that Mihai Antonescu, acting premier of Rumania, also will arrive.

The German reverses in Russia, the week-long visit of the Turkish foreign minister to Istanbul, and the repeated extension of United States Ambassador Laurence Steinhardt's visit here constitute the chief nourishment for the gossip circulating in bars and hotel lobbies.

But there appears to be not the slightest chance in the present circumstances that the Balkan puppet states will jump out of the Axis whirlwind.

Power Depends on Axis Link

Added to this is the fact that Hungarian, Rumanian and Bulgarian leaders joined the Axis chiefly to secure personal power and only so long as they are linked with the Axis can they maintain this position.

Recent political murders in Bulgaria demonstrate there is popular unrest in the Balkans. But the most reliable observers believe that this discontent can be converted to Allied use only with a clean Allied victory in North Africa and with the complete rout of the Germans in Russia.

The assassination of Gen. Christo Loukov, former Bulgarian war minister, in Sofia February 13, is considered evidence of rising feeling against the Germans in Bulgaria.

It had been reported that the Germans had plans for an out-and-out pro-Nazi dictatorship in Bulgaria and had picked Loukov to head it.

Boris Reported Courting Allies

Since it was widely believed that Loukov was becoming a threat to King Boris' rule, many say his passing was not greatly mourned by the King's government. There have been reports that the King is trying secretly to convince the Allies, against the day of their victory, that he always has been on their side.

The Bulgarian and Hungarian special emissaries now in Turkey are not talking peace terms with the Turks because they do not represent governments powerful enough to create armistice conditions.

The best informed quarters here say these envoys are discussing the outlines of the postwar southeastern European bloc of nations.

These discussions possibly may be connected with the general Turkish-Russian talks known to be proceeding in Ankara and Kuibyshev, and are considered to constitute an admission of the Hungarians and Bulgars that they expect as Axis defeat.

House Urged To Kill $25,000 Salary Limit

By Edward Ryan
Post Staff Writer

In a report sharply criticizing the President's dealings with the last Congress, the Ways and Means Committee yesterday urged the House to overthrow the present executive ceiling on salaries and substitute its own formula for controlling salaries by "an orderly legal process."

Representative Disney (Democrat) of Oklahoma, acting for the committee on the basis of its 15-10 vote endorsing his salary repeal plan, presented the House a bill to do these things:

1. Increase the statutory debt limit from 125 to 210 billion dollars.
2. Erase the President's order fixing $25,000, after taxes, as a wartime salary ceiling.
3. Freeze high bracket salaries at their level as of December 7, 1941, the date of Pearl Harbor, while permitting all other salaries to rise to a peak of $25,000 net, subject only to the power of the Treasury to disallow "unreasonable" increases in passing on corporate tax returns.
4. Simplify the Government's financial machinery for redeeming war saving bonds.

With the bill the House received a report written by Disney which reviewed the legislative history of the $25,000 salary ceiling question and concluded that President Roosevelt had violated the intent of Congress in issuing the salary order last October.

(Under Administration of the salary order, the figure of $67,200 is fixed as the gross salary which will yield $25,000 after taxes. The same $25,000 net limit is provided in the Disney bill as the peak for post-Pearl Harbor increases in salaries.)

Included in salaries, Disney said, would be bonuses, additional compensation and profit-sharing payments. He said that insurance and pension benefits in reasonable amounts would not be included, and neither would a percentage of corporate earnings distributed to individuals before taxes.

Disney declared that his salary limitation program—like high wartime income taxes, the power to renegotiate contracts, and existing Treasury authority to prevent "unreasonable salary increases"—would operate to avoid making of excessive profits in this war and to prevent growth of a crop of "war millionaires."

"At the same time, the amendment recognizes the importance to the American way of life to preserve incentive by not proscribing salary increases where the salary is less than $25,000 after taxes."

Disney added that his program provides a method of salary limitation by law rather than by "dictate."

"It does not admit of confiscation or liquidation of incomes," he declared. "This provision offers an 'adequate' legal process."

In reviewing dealings between the Capitol and the White House on the salary question during the last Congress, Disney recalled that the Ways and Means Committee had voted down the President's proposal for a surtax for limiting all incomes to $25,000 net.

Included in the report was the text of the President's letter renewing this proposal, offering to withdraw the salary limitation order if Congress would approve a war-time surtax to take 100 per cent of all income over $25,000 for single persons and $50,000 for married persons.

Champion Girl Welder

VERA ANDERSON—She'll meet the Kaiser champ

Pascagoula, Miss., Feb. 25 (AP)—Women welders at Pascagoula's vast Ingalls Shipyard decided they were the best in the country—and flung out a challenge to all takers.

Henry Kaiser's Oregon Shipbuilding Corp. in Portland accepted. And the two yards settled down to picking their best.

Today, pretty Vera Anderson emerged as the Pascagoula "Cham-

peen" by doing up a 15-foot weld of 5-16 horizontal fillet with a quarter-inch rod—in minutes and seconds that are a closely guarded "military secret."

The smiling Vera won a $100 cash prize in becoming Ingalls' champion and will meet the Kaiser champ in competition, R. I. Ingalls, head of the shipyard, is offering a prize to the winner of the inter-coastal contest.

Stop Bickering, Win the War, Rep. Bolton Tells Congress

By the Associated Press

Congress had an admonition today from a mother of two sons in the armed forces, Representative Frances P. Bolton (Republican), Ohio, to forget bickering in order to face the stark realities of global war.

Mrs. Bolton, Ohio's first woman member of the House, declared that the war must be won and that nothing else counts, save protection of the economy.

Mrs. Bolton appealed to her colleagues to evaluate every bit of legislation, "challenged by the thought of our men overseas."

"They," she said, "are facing the sheer realities of the most brutalizing war of all history. With death on every hand they are not concerned with politics, with subsidies, with crop penalties."

"They are not interested in overtime payments—the hours they know are based upon necessity—with life or death on their pay checks. They look to us for the tools of war. They expect us to measure up to their need."

Must Instill Confidence

Suggesting that the country needs to feel confidence in Congress, Mrs. Bolton called on Congress to make "certain that the basic intent and purpose of everything we do is to further the war effort, and to protect our economy."

She declared that every measure "to justify itself" must be for the welfare of strong fighting men, well equipped for battle, and a civillian army able to carry the load.

"So," she added, "when we give our final judgments, can we not base them at all times upon just one thing: The need of our armies and of our people for the vital products of the earth and of the machines? Can we not set aside every suggestion of sectionalism and selfish interest and think only of these fundamentals?"

"To meet our full responsibility must we not lift ourselves out of all bickering and disorder into a place where everything we say and all we do protects our production and our economy?"

Right and Privilege

"I am not preaching. I am clarifying what is in my own heart and in the hearts of all mothers—yes, of all wives and fathers, too—as we brace ourselves to meet the continuing tragedies that are upon us."

"I claim the right and the privilege to say these things because I am the mother of two sons in the service. Like every other mother I am perfectly aware of the drama of defeat being enacted in North Africa."

Asserting that the "people in their pain may turn and ask what is Congress doing," Mrs. Bolton said that "we must so govern our actions that we can say to them in all sincerity: 'We know there is no use of putting up a wailing wall in our hearts for our dead in an attempt to hide our inadequacy.'"

Stimson Deeply Impressed By Comeback of U. S. Troops

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Secretary of War Stimson yesterday expressed high satisfaction with the conduct of American troops in the Tunisian fighting and declared the "most significant feature" of the entire operation was the vigorous comeback they staged after an initial defeat.

The Army chief challenged reports that the United States soldiers which clashed with Rommel's forces were "green." He declared they were highly trained, and inexperienced in one sense only—that they had not yet been in combat.

This necessary combat experience can be gained only by fighting, he said, and until our troops have become battlewise we may expect some amount of uncertainty in their first encounters with the enemy.

Stimson termed the retreat of the Axis forces in central Tunisia, a "clean cut repulse" of the enemy. Retiring Germans and Italians in the Kasserine Pass area are being "continually harassed" by Allied planes which have supported our ground troops "with great skill," he said.

"But the most significant feature of the entire operation" Stimson declared in his weekly review of the war, "has been the fine reaction of our ground forces, tanks, infantry and artillery, when faced by modern war against veteran troops."

"Not only were they not broken by the German advance but, when called upon to counterattack, they came back with a vigor which the Germans were unable to withstand."

The War Secretary told reporters in this connection that General Eisenhower had reported that "all complacency" among the troops had disappeared and that they are "thoroughly mad and ready to fight."

Discussing the undeniable fact that troops must learn to fight under fire, Stimson declared that there are no soldiers in any army who learn as fast and have the same resourcefulness as the American soldier.

American losses in the last 10 days of fighting in central Tunisia have been heavy, the Secretary acknowledged, but not as severe as was at first believed. A "considerable" number of tanks, scout cars and field guns were lost, but they have been replaced, he stated.

Earlier estimates of personnel were reduced when several units which had been cut off by the enemy managed to make their way back to our lines.

The greater part of the British First Army is still based in north Tunisia, but Montgomery's Eighth army is "beginning to exert pressure on Rommel's forces in the Mareth Line, Stimson stated."

"The outlook is for heavy fighting along the entire Tunisian front," he added. "Despite initial reverses the prospects continue favorable. However, the current fighting serves to remind us that there is no easy road to victory and that we must expect some setbacks and considerable casualties."

Turning to the other fronts Stimson reported:

The Russians now control practically all of the railroad systems in the north Caucasus and in the Don and Donets Valleys. The Nazi objective now seems to be to keep open escape corridors to the Dnieper River, but that it is "quite possible" that substantial Axis forces may be trapped in the Caucasus.

Seek to Isolate Finland

Russian pressure is being exerted in the north with a view to isolating Finland from German forces, a maneuver which may account for the many rumors of Finnish peace overtures.

Allied air forces striking at enemy key points in Europe are "undoubtedly reducing Axis shipping and production." Similar activities in the South and Southeast Pacific "are continuing to take a heavy toll of Japanese planes and shipping."

There are signs of Japanese activity in China. America is gradually building up our combat air strength in China and the number of transport planes ferrying supplies to the Chinese army.

Murderous U-Boat Trickery

Illegal Driving May Cost 7 Cab Licenses

Seven District taxicab drivers faced the loss of their hacker's licenses yesterday and the cabs they have been driving may be cut to 1 gallon of gasoline a day as the result of having been caught violating the rule forbidding cabs to go more than 10 miles out of the city, it was revealed by Lieut. Joseph Harrington, in charge of cab inspection.

Two of the cabbies were caught by Virginia police in Richmond, two in Norfolk, two in Fredericksburg and one at Quantico, he said. All of the cabs were caught on Sunday.

Cab numbers and names of the drivers were sent to the local ODT, which, Harrington declared, is contemplating drastic action. In addition, his office is in position to revoke the hackers' licenses.

"The ODT has the power to slash the gas allowance to the cabs in question to 1 gallon a day," he said. "That should make them stay within the 10-mile limit."

At the same time Harrington revealed his office planned to continue its drive to apprehend auto owners who had listed their private cars as cabs in order to obtain an increase in gasoline allowance and priorities in getting tires.

"Last September we became aware that some persons had bought cabs, with the necessary signs on them, and were using them largely for their private comfort," he said. "We investigated several of these cases and found a number of violations existed."

"We have been continuing the checkup, inspecting parking lots, and cabs parked on the streets, to determine whether they are being used privately by the owners."

"When these owners come up for a renewal of their hacker's licenses on March 1 they are going to find it rough going," Harrington called attention to the fact that a cab must bear the name of the owner on it and the driver must have his personal identification on the inside.

Keefe Fights Service Family Fund Deletion

A husky Republican Congressman from Wisconsin prepared to raise his voice today in protest against cutting out of a six-billion-dollar appropriation bill the sum of 1.2 million to care for wives and infants of enlisted men in the four lowest service grades.

The voice, unmatched in sheer volume by any other in the House, belongs to Representative Keefe (Republican). His action is expected to have the support of Representatives Edith Nourse Rogers of Massachusetts, Jesse Sumner of Illinois and Francis P. Bolton of Ohio, all Republicans, all veteran members.

All expressed interest yesterday in seeing the 1.2 million dollars restored to the bill when the House begins to mark it up today.

In addition, Mrs. Rogers said that she would seek restoration of nearly three million dollars for the Office of Defense Health and Welfare Services to distribute through the States and the District for providing day care to children of women in war work.

Announcement of their plan to seek restoration of the funds came after Representative Taber (Republican) of New York, ranking minority member of the House Appropriations Committee, said that he hoped the deficiency bill would not be amended.

Appropriations Committee Chairman Cannon (Democrat) of Missouri said that the proposals to restore the funds would be subject to points of order on the ground that no enabling legislation exists to authorize the proposed programs.

Keefe agreed that the point of order would likely be sustained, but he added that the issue should be put squarely before the House, so that some member would have the opportunity to make the point of order.

Obviously fighting mad about the deletion of the maternity care funds, Keefe told reporters "it's a damn shame" that 1.2 million dollars was left out in a bill to appropriate more than six billion dollars.

Twenty-six States have set up the maternity care projects, he said, and the Federal money would be used only as grants-in-aid to States and localities, administered through the Children's Bureau.

"Stretched a Little"

He said that maybe the Social Security Act has been "stretched a little" in setting up the care for mothers of enlisted men, but he declared "if we can't solve this situation, what are we fighting for?"

Mrs. Rogers said that she hoped to combat a point of order against restoring the nearly three millions for day care of children whose mothers work in the war, on the ground that such activities were authorized by WPA legislation still on the statute books.

Whatever the outcome in the House, there was indication that backers of the two programs will carry their fight to the Senate.

which led to the trapping of those accused of peddling the drug.

Raithel told of a December 24 meeting with Mrs. Parrott in his office here when the writer told him that Bryan did not know he was being used by the Government.

"He was a professional musician, and she doubted if he would double cross other musicians," Raithel testified. Bryan was a guitar player in Benny Goodman's band before his induction into the Army last June.

Raithel described the escape, as related to him by Mrs. Parrott. She said she talked with the soldier in the stockade she felt that she was responsible for his trouble.

"If you've got nerve enough to lie down in the back seat," she told Bryan, "I've got nerve enough to drive you out of here to get a good dinner."

"You're crazy," the prisoner replied. "I'll show you," she declared, starting the car and speeding past the armed guard with a wave of her hand.

"Look out, the guard will shoot," Bryan warned.

"Let him shoot," she called.

Pvt. Sanford Haimes, the guard, testified that he didn't shoot "because there were too many soldiers about."

Two Found Alive In Long-Lost Plane

Edmonton, Alberta, Feb. 25 (AP)—United States Army Air Force officials announced today the finding of one of two planes which had been missing in the north country since February 5, and said the pilot and co-pilot had been killed in a crash, but that two injured passengers had been rescued.

The dead were identified as Pilot John Hart of Minneapolis and Co-pilot Kenneth Jones of Elida, Ohio, members of a commercial air line crew under contract to the Air Transport Command.

The injured passengers were Staff Sergt. Edwin Wilczynski of the United States Army Air Forces and Rupert Alexander, a civilian, both of whom had suffered leg fractures.

Turning to the other fronts Stimson reported:

Chinese in Lupao Japs Quitting Canton Rail Line Position

By the Associated Press
Chungking, Feb. 25 (AP).—A general Japanese withdrawal along the southern section of the Canton-Hankow railway is in progress. Chinese field dispatches reported tonight.

They said the Chinese had retaken Lupao, 25 miles northwest of Canton, on Tuesday and that the battered enemy forces retreated in the direction of Samshui, a river and railway town west of Canton, after a desperate rearguard action.

Chinese troops were reported to have passed Kuntien and pressed on toward Sunkai, a railway town 15 miles north of Canton, and one of the key points in the Japanese defense system around this great south China city.

Earlier today a Chinese army spokesman, reviewing the military situation, declared that "on the whole the Japanese have gained nothing recently from their widespread drives."

And the Chinese high command announced that while the Japanese are pressing their local offensives in at least four theaters in the Yangtze Valley and in the far southwest, most of these have been held or turned back.

A communique told of a Japanese attempt to cross the Yangtze in central Hupeh Province which was turned into a costly failure by Chinese artillery fire and air bombing.

In western Yunnan Province a Japanese attempt to advance northward west of the Salween River was said to have been frustrated.

Definite Plan Needed
London, Feb. 25 (AP).—Gen. Hsuing Shih-fel, head of a Chinese military mission, told a press conference today that the first thing necessary in the strategy of attacking Japan "is for the United Nations to get together and settle on some definite plan."

Any popular idea that a concerted assault on the Japanese can wait for destruction of Germany is mistaken, General Hsuing declared.

Boeing officials lodged protests with the Army Air Force and with Harvey W. Brown and James A. Duncan, officials of the A. F. of L. International Association of Machinists, with which the local union is affiliated.

The unionists resolved that: "If a directive is not issued on aircraft wages based on common sense and the conditions under which it was asked is not forthcoming before midnight Sunday, February 28, that Monday morning at 12:30 a. m., the first day of March, the members of the Aeronautical Mechanics Union will hold a 24-hour general meeting and will proceed to unfinished business and from then on will wait for the War Labor Board to give its decision."

"If no action is forthcoming by Wednesday midnight, we will ask that our international union call a general meeting of all aircraft locals."

U. S. Fighters Shoot Down Six Nip Planes Attacking Air Base

By the Associated Press
New Delhi, Feb. 25.—The Allies scored two one-sided victories—one in the air and one in a commando-like ground attack—over the Japanese in India and Burma in the last three days, communiques today disclosed.

The first was a surprise raid on the small Japanese occupied village of Myebon, about 60 miles southeast of Akyab in Burma, Monday night by raiders from Marshal Sir Archibald D. Wavell's forces. It was announced that all installations which had been useful to the enemy were destroyed.

The second success was scored by United States fighter planes of the Tenth Air Force, which rose to challenge 30 Japanese bombers and fighters which came over the Burmese mountains to strike at airfields in northeast Assam, India.

A United States headquarters communique said 6 enemy planes were shot down, 12 probably destroyed and others damaged. None of the American planes was even damaged.

The raid was the second directed against the same target in three days, the first also having failed to cause material damage.

United States fighters, doubling as light bombers, also were said to have wrecked spans of two bridges of value to the Japanese, coming back without a scratch.

The targets were the 200-foot railroad bridge 10 miles west of Myittha and a 150-foot steel span six miles northeast of Pinbaw. Other bombers dropped explosives on the railway station and sidings at Thazi and on Akyab.

Employing the same tactics as Britain's famed commandos, Marshal Wavell's troops landed at Myebon from vessels of the Royal Indian Navy coastal forces, the communique said, "and remained in possession of the place about 5 hours."

"All buildings which had been useful to the enemy were burned, and the Japanese were driven off the 100-foot river steamer was destroyed," it continued. "The opposition was very slight and quickly overcome. The raiders suffered no casualties."

handed down in keeping with the American way of life and standards of living."

Harold Gibson, president of the Aeronautical Mechanics Union district lodge, asserted, however, that no appeal for work stoppages would be involved in the calls for "24-hour meetings."

Gibson declared in announcing the mass meeting that the Labor Board has been "lulled to complacency through lack of physical demonstration by aircraft workers."

He added: "We're fed up. We're going to tell the WLB to get off the dime."

At Los Angeles, Dale Reed, president of Aeronautical Industry District Lodge 727, said last night that union members in the Lockheed and Vega plants would meet Sunday to consider action protesting the delay by the War Labor Board in determining wage scales for the Pacific Coast airplane industry.

Envoys in Istanbul, Peace Rumors Fly

Roumanian Expected As Other Balkan Diplomats Gather

By Paul Kern Lee
Associated Press Staff Writer
Istanbul, Feb. 25 (AP).—This city, nearest neutral point to the Balkans, is a sounding board for the multiple peace rumors affecting Bulgaria, Rumania and Hungary.

One Hungarian official and two Bulgarian emissaries have arrived here; and there are rumors, as well as persistent denials in well informed quarters, that Mihai Antonescu, acting premier of Rumania, also will arrive.

The German reverses in Russia, the week-long visit of the Turkish foreign minister to Istanbul, and the repeated extension of United States Ambassador Laurence Steinhardt's visit here constitute the chief nourishment for the gossip circulating in bars and hotel lobbies.

But there appears to be not the slightest chance in the present circumstances that the Balkan puppet states will jump out of the Axis whirligig.

Power Depends on Axis Link
Added to this is the fact that Hungarian, Rumanian and Bulgarian leaders joining the Axis chiefly to secure personal power and only so long as they are linked with the Axis can they maintain this position.

Recent political murders in Bulgaria demonstrate there is popular unrest in the Balkans. But the most reliable observers believe that this discontent can be converted to Allied use only with a clean Allied victory in North Africa and with the complete rout of the Germans in Russia.

The assassination of Gen. Christo Loukov, former Bulgarian war minister, in Sofia February 13, is considered evidence of rising feeling against the Germans in Bulgaria. It had been reported that the Germans had plans for an out-and-out pro-Nazi dictatorship in Bulgaria and had picked Loukov to head it.

Boris Reported Courting Allies
Since it was widely believed that Loukov was becoming a threat to King Boris' rule, many say his passing was not greatly mourned by the King's government. There have been reports that the King is trying secretly to convince the Allies, against the day of their victory, that he always has been on their side.

The Bulgarian and Hungarian special emissaries now in Turkey are not talking peace terms with the Turks because they do not represent governments powerful enough to create armistice conditions.

The best informed quarters here say these envoys are discussing the outlines of the postwar southeastern European bloc of nations. These discussions possibly may be connected with the general Turkish-Russian talks known to be proceeding in Ankara and Kuibyshev, and are considered to constitute an admission of the Hungarians and Bulgars that they expect an Axis defeat.

It was disclosed that French bombers had gone into action for the first time in this theater, down by a veteran unit of the regular French air forces.

War Sidelights

Nazis Left Rostov Mass Of Ruins

Moscow, Feb. 25 (AP).—The finest buildings of Rostov were blown up or burned by the Germans before they retreated, and hardly a house in the entire city remains intact, an official Tass news agency broadcast said today.

Special demolition squads were detailed to destroy the city, the news agency said. It reported that the Maxim Gorky Theater, one of the finest theaters in the Soviet Union; the House of the Soviets, largest building in Rostov; the Railway Administration Building, and many factories, power stations and printing houses were reduced to charred ruins.

More than 50 schools, the Red Army Club, and laboratories and clinics of the Rostov Medical Institute were burned. Tass said, along with the Central Scientific Library with its 3,000,000 books. Books from 25 other libraries were said to have been dumped into sheds and burned or carried away.

Nazi General Killed
New York, Feb. 25 (AP).—A DNB dispatch broadcast by the Nazi radio to German editors and recorded in New York by Federal Communications Commission monitors said today that Lieut. Gen. Friedrich Fenz had been killed in action on the Russian front. General Fenz was not further identified.

Nazis Had Named Tebezza Traffic Cops
Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Feb. 25 (AP).—The Nazis were so certain they were going to take Tebezza in the now smashed Kasserine Gap offensive that they sent along a number of military policemen to serve as town traffic cops.

Seven of these M. P.'s rolling merrily along the road to Tebezza were captured by U. S. troops. They thought the town had fallen to the Germans, but were assured the Americans still were directing traffic there.

House Urged To Kill $25,000 Salary Limit

By Edward Ryan

Post Staff Writer

In a report sharply criticizing the President's dealings with the Ways and Means Committee yesterday urged the House to overthrow the present executive ceiling on salaries and substitute its own formula for controlling salaries by "an orderly legal process."

Representative Disney (Democrat of Oklahoma, acting for the committee on the basis of its 15-10 vote endorsing his salary repeal plan, presented the House a bill to do these things:

1. Increase the statutory debt limit from 125 to 210 billion dollars.

2. Erase the President's order fixing $25,000, after taxes, as a wartime salary ceiling.

3. Freeze high bracket salaries at their level as of December 7, 1941, the date of Pearl Harbor, while permitting all other salaries to rise to a peak of $25,000 net, subject only to the power of the Treasury to disallow "unreasonable" increases in passing on corporate tax returns.

4. Simplify the Government's financial machinery for redeeming war saving bonds.

With the bill the House received a report written by Disney which reviewed the legislative history of the $25,000 salary ceiling question and concluded that President Roosevelt had violated the intent of Congress in issuing the salary order last October.

(Under Administration of the salary order, the figure of $67,000 is fixed as the gross salary which would yield $25,000 after taxes. The same $25,000 net limit is provided in the Disney bill as the peak for post-Pearl Harbor increases in salaries.)

Included in salaries, Disney said, "could be bonuses, additional compensation and profit-sharing payments. He said that insurance and pension benefits in reasonable amounts would not be included, and neither would a percentage of corporate earnings distributed to individuals before taxes."

Disney declared that his salary limitation program—like high wartime income taxes, the power to renegotiate contracts, and existing Treasury authority to prevent "unreasonable salary increases"—would operate to avoid making of excessive profits in this war and to prevent growth of a crop of "war millionaires."

"At the same time, the amendment recognizes the importance to the American way of life to preserve incentive by not proscribing salary increases where the salary is less than $25,000 after taxes."

Disney added that his program provides a method of salary limitation by law rather than by dictation.

"It does not admit of nonrecognition of liquidation of incomes," he declared. "This provision offers an orderly legal process."

In reviewing dealings between the Capitol and the White House on the salary question during the last Congress, Disney recalled that the Ways and Means Committee had voted down the President's proposal for a super-tax for limiting all incomes to $25,000 net.

Included in the report was the text of the President's letter renewing this proposal, offering to withdraw the salary limitation order if Congress would approve a war-time super-tax to take 100 per cent of all income over $25,000 for single persons and $50,000 for married persons.

Champion Girl Welder

VERA ANDERSON—She'll meet the Kaiser champ

Pascagoula, Miss., Feb. 25 (AP)—Women welders at Pascagoula's vast Ingalls Shipyard decided they were the best in the country—and flung out a challenge to all takers. Henry Kaiser's Oregon Shipbuilding Corp. in Portland accepted. And the two yards settled down to picking their best.

Today, pretty Vera Anderson emerged as the Pascagoula "Cham-

peen" by doing up a 15-foot weld of 5-16 horizontal fillet with a quarter-inch rod—in minutes and seconds that are a closely guarded "military secret."

The smiling Vera won a $100 cash prize in becoming Ingalls' champion and will meet the Kaiser champ in competition. R. I. Ingalls, head of the shipyard, is offering a prize to the winner of the inter-coastal contest.

Keefe Fights Service Family Fund Deletion

A husky Republican Congressman from Wisconsin prepared to raise his voice today in protest against cutting out of a six-billion-dollar appropriation bill the sum of 1.2 million to care for wives and infants of enlisted men in the four lowest service grades.

The voice, unmatched in sheer volume by any other in the House, belongs to Representative Keefe (Republican). His action is expected to have the support of Representative Edith Nourse Rogers of Massachusetts, Jessie Sumner of Illinois and Frances P. Bolton of Ohio, all Republicans, all veteran members.

All expressed interest yesterday in seeing the 1.2 million dollars restored to the bill when the House begins to mark it up today.

In addition, Mrs. Rogers said that she would seek restoration of nearly three million dollars for the Office of Defense Health and Welfare Services to distribute through the States and the District for providing day care to children of women in war work.

Announcement of their plan to seek restoration of the funds came after Representative Taber (Republican) of New York, ranking minority member of the House Appropriations Committee, said that he hoped the deficiency bill would not be amended.

Appropriations Committee Chairman Cannon (Democrat) of Missouri said that the proposals to restore the funds would be subject to points of order on the ground that no enabling legislation exists to authorize the proposed programs.

Keefe agreed that the point of order would likely be sustained, but he added that the issue should be put squarely before the House so that some member would have the opportunity to make the point of order.

Obviously fighting mad about the deletion of the maternity care funds, Keefe told reporters "it's a damn shame" that 1.2 million dollars was left out in a bill to appropriate more than six billion dollars.

Twenty-six States have set up the maternity care projects, he said, and the Federal money would be used only as grants-in-aid to States and localities, administered through the Children's Bureau.

"Stretched a Little"

He said that maybe the Social Security Act has been "stretched a little" in setting up the care for mothers of enlisted men, but he declared "if we can't solve this situation, what are we fighting for."

Mrs. Rogers said that she hoped to combat a point of order against restoring the nearly three millions for day care of children whose mothers work in the war, on the ground that such activities were authorized by WPA legislation still on the statute books.

Whatever the outcome in the House, there was indication that backers of the two programs will carry their fight to the Senate.

which led to the trapping of those accused of peddling the drug.

Rathel told of a December 24 meeting with Mrs. Parrott in his office here when the writer told him that Bryan did not know he was being used by the Government.

"He was a professional musician, and she doubted if he would double cross other musicians," Rathel testified. Bryan was a guitar player in Benny Goodman's band before his induction into the Army last June.

Rathel described the escape, as related to him by Mrs. Parrott. She said she talked with the soldier in the stockade she felt that she was responsible for his trouble.

"If you've got nerve enough to lie down in the back seat," she told Bryan, "I've got nerve enough to drive you out of here to get a good dinner."

"You're crazy," the prisoner replied. "I'll show you," she declared, starting the car and speeding past the armed guard with a wave of her hand.

"Look out the guard will shoot," Bryan warned.

"Let him shoot," she called. Pvt. Sanford Haimes, the guard, testified that he didn't shoot "because there were too many soldiers about."

Stop Bickering, Win the War, Rep. Bolton Tells Congress

By the Associated Press

Congress had an admonition today from a mother of two sons in the armed forces, Representative Frances P. Bolton (Republican, Ohio, to forget bickering in order to face the stark realities of global war.

Mrs. Bolton, Ohio's first woman member of the House, declared that the war must be won and that nothing else counts, save protection of the economy.

Mrs. Bolton appealed to her colleagues to evaluate every bit of legislation, "challenged by the thought of our men overseas."

"They," she said, "are facing the sheer realities of the most brutalizing war of all history. With death on every hand they are not concerned with parties, with subsidies, with crop penalties."

"They are not interested in overtime payments—the hours they know are based upon necessity—with life or death on their pay checks. They look to us for the tools of war. They expect us to measure up to their need."

Must Instill Confidence

Suggesting that the country needs to feel confidence in Congress, Mrs. Bolton called on Congress to make "certain that the basic intent and purpose of everything we do is to further the war effort, to protect our economy."

She declared that every measure "to justify itself" must be for the welfare of strong fighting men, well equipped for battle, and a civilian army able to carry the load.

"So," she added, "when we give our final judgments, can we not base them at all times upon just one thing: The need of our armies and of our people for the vital products of the earth and of the machines? Can we not set aside every suggestion of sectionalism and selfish interest and think only of these fundamentals?"

Right and Privilege

"I am not preaching. I am clarifying what is in my own heart and in the hearts of all mothers—yes, of all wives and fathers, too—as we brace ourselves to meet the continuing tragedies that are upon us."

"I claim the right and the privilege to say these things because I am the mother of two sons in the service. Like every other mother I am perfectly aware of the drama of defeat being enacted in North Africa."

Asserting that the "people in their pain may turn and ask what is Congress doing," Mrs. Bolton said that "we must so govern our actions that we can say to them in all sincerity: 'We know there is no use of putting up a wall in front of our hearts for our dead in an attempt to hide our inadequacy.'"

Earlier estimates of personnel were reduced when several units which had been cut off by the enemy managed to make their way back to our lines.

The greater part of the British First Army is still mud-bound in north Tunisia, but Montgomery's Eighth army is beginning to exert pressure on Rommel's forces in the Mareth Line, Stimson stated.

"The outlook is for heavy fighting along the entire Tunisian Front," he added. "Despite initial reverses the prospects continue favorable. However, the current fighting serves to remind us that there is no easy road to victory and that we must expect some setbacks and considerable casualties."

Turning to the other fronts Stimson reported: The Russians now control practically all of the railroad systems in the north Caucasus and in the Don and Donets Valleys. The Nazi objective now seems to be to keep open escape corridors to the Dnieper River, but that it is "quite possible" that substantial Axis forces may be trapped in the Donets Basin as well as in the Caucasus.

Seek to Isolate Finland

Russian pressure is being exerted in the north with a view to isolating Finland from German forces, a maneuver which may account for the many rumors of Finnish peace overtures.

Allied air forces striking at enemy key points in Europe are "undoubtedly reducing Axis shipping and production." Similar activities in the South and Southeast Pacific "are continuing to take a heavy toll of Japanese planes and shipping."

There are signs of Japanese activity in China. America is gradually building up our combat air strength in China and the number of transport planes ferrying supplies to the Chinese army.

American losses in the last 10 days of fighting in central Tunisia have been heavy, the Secretary acknowledged, but not as severe as was at first believed. A "considerable" number of tanks, scout cars and field guns were lost, but they have been replaced, he stated.

Two Found Alive In Long-Lost Plane

Edmonton, Alberta, Feb. 25 (AP)—United States Army Air Force officials announced today the finding of one of two planes which had been missing in the north country since February 5, and said the pilot and co-pilot had been killed in a crash, but that two injured passengers had been rescued.

The dead were identified as Pilot John Hart of Minneapolis and Co-pilot Kenneth Jones of Elida, Ohio, members of a commercial air line crew under contract to the Air Transport Command.

The injured passengers were Staff Sgt. Edwin Wilczynski of the United States Army Air Forces and Rupert Alexander, a civilian, both of whom had suffered leg fractures.

Illegal Driving May Cost 7 Cab Licenses

Seven District taxicab drivers faced the loss of their hacker's licenses yesterday and the cabs they have been driving may be cut to 1 gallon of gasoline a day as the result of having been caught violating the rule forbidding cabs to go more than 10 miles out of the city, it was revealed by Lieut. Joseph Harrington, in charge of hack inspection.

Two of the cabbies were caught by Virginia police in Richmond, two in Norfolk, two in Fredericksburg and one at Quantico, he said. All of the cabs were caught on Sunday.

Cab numbers and names of the drivers were sent to the local ODT, which, Harrington declared, is contemplating drastic action. In addition, his office is in position to revoke the hackers' licenses.

"The ODT has the power to slash the gas allowance to the cabs in question to 1 gallon a day," he said. "That should make them stay within the 10-mile limit."

At the same time Harrington revealed his office planned to continue its drive to apprehend auto owners who had listed their private cars as cabs in order to obtain an increase in gasoline allowance and priorities in getting tires.

"Last September we became aware that some persons had bought cabs, with the necessary signs on them, and were using them largely for their private comfort," he said. "We investigated several of these cases and found a number of violations existed."

"We have been continuing the checkup, inspecting parking lots and cabs parked on the streets, to determine whether they are being used privately by the owners. "When these owners come up for a renewal of their hacker's licenses on March 1 they are going to find it rough going," Harrington called attention to the fact that a cab must bear the name of the owner on it and the driver must have his personal identification on the inside.

Blind Marine Gets Navy Cross For Killing 200 Japs in Pacific

Philadelphia, Feb. 25.—Marine Private Albert Schmid's amazing feat of killing 200 Japs one bloody August night on Guadalcanal brought him the Navy Cross today—but he didn't see the medal nor 100 Marines who paraded in his honor.

The 23-year-old machine gunner lost the sight of one eye and was nearly blinded in the other when a Jap-tossed hand grenade finally blasted him from a sand-bagged hole on the banks of the Tenaru River.

"For extraordinary heroism in the line of his profession as a machine gunner," said the citation read at a ceremony before the medal was pinned on Schmid's breast by Col. A. E. Randall, commanding officer of the Marines at the yard.

Rear Admiral Milo F. Draemel, Commandant of the Fourth Naval District, stood beside the youthful hero.

"I couldn't even see the colonel's hands," Schmid confided later, "but I got just as much of a thrill in receiving the Navy Cross as I did in shooting those Japs."

Schmid, Pvt. John Rivers of Quakertown, Pa., and Corp. Leroy Diamond of Brooklyn, N. Y., were squatting in their machinegun nest overlooking the Tenaru the night of August 2, when a Jap force attempted to make a crossing. In the fierce assault, Rivers was killed and Diamond wounded. Schmid carried on alone, alternately loading and firing, until a hand grenade knocked the gun out of commission.

"Lacking the protection of riflemen," said his citation, "it was necessary for the squad to tear down their frontal protection in order to meet the oncoming enemy. Under the greatest of difficulties the enemy was met and repulsed. In the action Schmid was seriously wounded. His courage, intrepidity and fortitude contributed largely to the defeat of the enemy."

Schmid returned to Philadelphia February 19 and has been a patient at the naval hospital since.

Wheeler Bill Would Exempt Most Fathers

By the Associated Press

A bill to exempt all fathers married prior to Pearl Harbor from induction into the armed forces was introduced yesterday by Senator Wheeler (Democrat) of Montana.

The blanket exemption would cover all fathers of children under 18 who are living with their families.

"I'm not seeking to interfere with the armed forces," Wheeler said, "but I submit to the common sense of the Senate and to the Nation that if a single man is physically fit and between the ages of 38 and 45, he should be taken before breaking up the homes of America by taking married men."

The induction of men from 38 to 45 was halted some months ago on the complaint of the Army that older men could not stand the rigors of training. Authority exists to resume induction of men above 37 without further legislation.

Meanwhile Selective Service disclosed that several positions in the commercial fishing industry had been added to the list of jobs carrying eligibility for draft deferment.

Benefitted were "all-around fishermen... capable of performing all fishing operations... and who can perform requisite construction, repair and maintenance of (fishing) gear," captains, mates, chief and second engineers and cooks of fishing vessels; artificial breeding technicians; oyster culturists and those who handle barge-operated pile drivers. On the West Coast only, foremen of rigging scows and barge-operated pile drivers were included.

Rayburn Assails Idea of Removing Soldier Guards

Speaker Rayburn (Democrat) of Texas, tossed down his gavel yesterday to voice "amazement" at a suggestion that Army guards be relieved from the job of guarding the Capitol and the congressional office buildings.

Representative Knutson (Republican) of Minnesota made the suggestion, declaring that in view of the manpower shortage, 55 Army privates and two officers should be removed from the Capitol area, and the guard job be turned over to the Capitol police.

Rayburn said he was "utterly amazed" at the idea of turning over the care of 180 million dollars worth of property to "a few Metropolitan police, and a few patronage boys who are fine boys, who want to come here to go to school."

"It happens to be the business of the Speaker to protect the property on this hill," Rayburn observed, "and I am going to keep somebody here to protect these buildings."

Two Army Fliers Die In Training Crash

San Antonio, Feb. 25 (P).—The bodies of two Kelly Field fliers were found in the wreckage of their training plane about 2½ miles south of the field today.

The men were identified as Lieut. Charles W. Wilson, 24, of Red Bank, N. J., pilot, and Staff Sgt. Thomas V. Robinson, 24, Ashland, Wis.

Vandenberg Backs McKellar Bill as Needed to Curb Spending

Protesting what he termed "considerable misunderstanding about this McKellar bill" requiring Senate confirmation of Federal jobholders receiving $4500 or more a year, Senator Vandenberg (Democrat) Michigan, said yesterday such legislation is needed to hold "these bureaucrats to strict accountability for their expenditures."

In a letter inserted in the Congressional Record, Vandenberg said he normally opposed the confirmation principle because "exercise of this Senate veto on personnel may easily become a mere instrument of partisan patronage and political pique counter tactics."

"But under the abnormal conditions which we now confront I want to suggest that this possible infirmity sinks into relative insignificance compared with the far larger public service to be rendered by this process of scrutiny."

Check on Funds

Under existing conditions, he said, there is no way Congress can check on unavoidable "lump sum" appropriations "except as the new positions thus created and their personnel are submitted to the Senate for confirmation."

"In my view," Vandenberg asserted, "this goes to the very heart of the country's right to legitimate protection against a 'travagant and wasteful bureaucracy.'"

Vandenberg's letter, addressed to the editor of the Bay City (Mich.) Times, was a reply to an editorial saying that the bill "does not seem to have any more than nuisance value" and that "McKellar, Vandenberg and others would do well to forget about this unwise and placid piece of legislation."

Sees Public Protected

"It has solely to do with the protection of the public purse," Vandenberg wrote, "and with a practical congressional check upon the sprawling bureaucratic personnel which is rapidly becoming an intolerable burden upon the American taxpayer."

Meanwhile, a Senate committee's apparent determination to force a vote on the bill was expected in some quarters to provoke a fresh presidential protest.

Despite Mr. Roosevelt's expressed "unqualified opposition" to the bill, Chairman Van Nuys (Democrat) of Indiana of the Senate Judiciary Committee said most Republican and Democratic members of the group "are certain to report it out Monday for a floor vote."

Although Minority Leader McNary (Republican) of Oregon has opposed the measure and Majority Leader Barkley (Democrat) of Kentucky has declared himself against legislation of this type in the past, the bill appeared to command enough support to provide a close contest.

Axis Meets Stiff Opposition in Drive On Serb Partisans

Bern, Switzerland, Feb. 25 (P).—Balkan dispatches indicated today that Axis forces, although supported by both dive-bombers and artillery, were meeting fierce opposition in new efforts to wipe out guerilla warriors of Bosnia.

A Budapest dispatch quoting a Zagreb report said 5000 partisans had been killed and an equal number wounded since the beginning of the latest campaign, which has frequently involved skirmishes in deep snow across rugged country at an altitude of 6000 feet.

The Axis-influenced dispatch said partisans had fired supply depots, but did not mention Axis casualties. However, losses of Italian troops alone last year, before the Nazis decided upon the present big effort to clear out resistance in parts of former Yugoslavia, totaled 6000 dead, and more than 6000 wounded.

1 Out of 8 Raiders Bagged in Britain

London, Feb. 25 (P).—One out of every eight German raider planes that have hit Great Britain this winter has been shot down by R. A. F. fighter patrols, the Air Ministry said tonight.

This is nearly three times the number of British fighters and bombers the enemy has been able to intercept over France and the Low Countries.

Even though the score gives the R. A. F. a comfortable margin, the ministry said "a number of measures" are being taken which probably will make the attacks even more costly.

Allied Planes Again Attack Rabaul Shipping

Allied Headquarters in Australia (Friday), Feb. 26 (P).—Allied bombers, winging for the third straight time across New Britain for attacks on shipping at Rabaul, possibly damaged a seaplane tender and three cargo ships, the Allied High Command announced today.

In two previous raids, Gen. Douglas MacArthur's bombers scored a hit on a large Jap warship believed to be a cruiser, drove another big warship aground on a reef off nearby Cape Gazelle, damaged two other warships and a 10,000-ton cargo ship.

Off Babo, Dutch New Guinea, a heavy bomber scored a direct hit on the bow of a 4000-ton cargo vessel. Off Alexishafen, New Guinea, a small Jap cargo ship was attacked by a heavy bomber and two 500-pound bombs either hit the ship or came close enough to damage it.

OPA Sends Out 1500 Agents To Break Black Market in Food

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

Fifteen hundred agents have been assigned to stamp out the black market and jail the traders who are raking in millions of dollars every week on bootleg meat and other foods. Many of these traders are former gangsters.

Besides overcharging the people, Price Administrator Prentiss M. Brown said, the black market engenders public health and jeopardizes the food supplies of the Army and Navy.

When they trade with the black market, either on purpose or without knowing it, people are often buying:

Horse meat when they think they are getting beef.
Low grade beef of little food value when they are told it is prime.
Tainted or diseased meat which has not been checked by Federal inspectors who inspect meat sold in legitimate packing houses.

Brown appealed to the public to help by reporting violations. He said such reports had spurred enforcement efforts in Boston, where black market trading was widespread, and led to a number of prosecutions.

Meanwhile, the Office of Price Administration worked on new measures to round out its offensive against food frontiers.

"The OPA is recommending a price ceiling on cattle and hogs," an announcement said, adding significantly that the Department of Agriculture—which does not like the ceiling proposal—shares responsibility with OPA for price actions regarding agricultural commodities.

Being rushed to completion was a program for consumer rationing of meats, with a view to getting more even distribution of meat throughout the country, providing a fair distribution among consumers and making possible closer control of marketing from the slaughter house to the butcher shop counter.

The concentrated attack on the black market was described as a preliminary to the putting of these measures into effect.

The black market offensive got under way three weeks ago and 180 alleged black market traders already have been indicted or arrested. Suits for injunctions or for triple damages have been started against 280 more.

These prosecutions were in Washington, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cleveland, Detroit, Denver, San Francisco, Chicago and other cities.

There are more to come. Alex Elson, OPA regional attorney, announced last night that six complaints against slaughterers were ready for filing in Chicago Federal Court and that there would be 50 others within a week.

Elson said there would be about 175 other black market prosecutions in other Midwestern cities. Some of the cases involved contaminated meat which would have been condemned in the ordinary channels of the trade, but was sold for human food through the unsupervised black markets.

"Justice—and a stern justice—is catching up with black market operators," Brown commented during these developments. "Every one of these gentry taken out of the market and properly punished lessens the serious danger to public health that is present whenever contaminated meat is sold."

The OPA made it clear that "proper punishment" means jail. Brown quoted the remarks of Federal Judge F. Ryan Duffy who gave a black market meat dealer 60 days in Detroit.

"One of the important elements in the fight to keep the cost of living down," said Judge Duffy, "has been the regulations issued with references to maximum prices on meats, particularly. A violation that is linked up with the fight we are conducting on the home front is a serious matter. Where it is a question of making profits beyond the law . . . I think the court must impose a prison sentence."

Farm Price Rises Voted by Senate

and with the hope its results would not tend toward "runaway inflation."

Neither the Department of Agriculture nor the OPA last night was able to estimate possible effects of the bill on farm prices because of many technical factors involved.

OPA officials, however, said the sum undoubtedly would be considerable. Senator Bankhead, on the other hand, said it would have "none, or very little" effect on prices to consumers.

The fact that Administration leaders voted for the legislation was interpreted as meaning they thus sought to block pending bills which might have a more drastic effect on consumer prices.

Among these is a measure introduced by Representative Pace (Democrat) of Georgia, to compel farm wages to be counted as part of the production costs used in computing parity prices.

This measure, the Department of Agriculture has estimated, would mean food price increases of between 10 and 15 per cent.

Price-control legislation now operative states that no ceiling may be placed on a farm product lower than 100 per cent of parity.

Parity is the price at which the product's purchasing power in terms of non-farm commodities is equivalent to what it was during the fixed base period from 1909 to 1914.

When the law went into operation the President directed that Government benefit payments, as part of the farmer's return for raising crops, should be figured into prices placed under ceilings.

As a result, OPA has been able to fix some market prices below parity—what the idea that the market price plus the benefit payments would yield the farmer his 100 per cent return.

Not many farm products are now selling below parity to the consumer—wheat and corn still are. The corn ceiling, for instance, is about $1 per bushel, although consumers get it at about 92 cents.

Under the Bankhead provision, it is estimated, the ceiling would have to be raised to about $1.10.

Bankhead told the Senate that no member of the body had any idea when the Stabilization Act was passed that President Roosevelt would issue an order that Government payments be considered in fixing the ceilings.

Bankhead replied that the President's position in having the benefit payments considered has been consistent. "I think Congress was negligent in failing to make it clear what ought to be done with regard to benefit payments," he said.

Representative Pace, questioning Secretary Wickard yesterday at a House Agriculture Committee meeting, asked whether he did not believe the farmer should get the full cost of production for his products without incentive payments, and whether removal of incentive payments after the war might not lead to a serious decline.

"I'll grant you it is controversial," Wickard said, "but only two basic commodities are now below parity. They are wheat and corn."

Pace insisted his bill would mean an increase of only 2 to 3 per cent in prices. Industrial wages, he said, have gone up about 500 per cent since the base period for computing parity was determined.

"Under the 48-hour law," he said, "they are going up still more. Is it not true that in some instances farmers have to spend more than their Government payments to earn them?"

Secretary Wickard agreed this was true, but said the spiral once started upward would have to be "continued all along the way." The Secretary further agreed there might "be an element of unfairness" in corn price ceilings, but said there "have to be compromises somewhere."

The National Labor Relations Board announced it had ordered a collective bargaining election to be held at the Williamsport, Md., plant of W. D. Byron & Sons of Maryland, Inc., within 30 days.

The election was directed to determine what proportion of the production and maintenance employees at the Williamsport Tannery were members of the International Fur and Leather Workers Union (C. I. O.) and whether they wished to be represented by the union in collective bargaining.

Cotton-Field Troop Call Held Unwarranted

On grounds that the emergency did not seem sufficient to warrant such action, the Army yesterday recalled its order to have troops harvest remains of the long staple cotton crop in Arizona.

Secretary of War Stimson, announcing postponement of plans made public Tuesday, pointed out that the President's offer of troops to help meet agricultural labor shortages applied only when all other sources of labor had been utilized.

Both Secretary of Agriculture Wickard and War Manpower Commissioner McNutt, supposedly advised the War Department that the Arizona situation did not warrant the use of soldiers. At the Department of Agriculture it was said the Army's original order had taken Secretary Wickard by surprise.

Loss Set at 7500 Bales
Senator McFarland (Democrat) of Arizona, on the other hand, pointed to the estimate of the farm bureau of his State that postponement of the Army-picking plan would probably mean the loss of approximately 7500 bales.

The planters, he said, are ready to plow up the crop—needed for paratroopers—and put their fields into war foods. Laborers furnished by the Farm Security Administration to harvest the cotton, he said, were up—and not because the crop was in.

According to FSA figures, approximately 1700 workers were secured for the Arizona cotton harvesting and all contracts were met.

Not all farmers contracted with the FSA for a migrant labor supply, however, mainly because of FSA's rulings that wages must equal at least 30 cents an hour for this labor and farmers must pay a flat rate of $5 toward defraying transportation costs.

Manipulation Denied
FSA officials yesterday denied that any effort had been made to take cotton picking off the traditional so-called "pay basis."

"We have merely insisted that the wage yield be at least 30 cents an hour the average," it was said.

Approximately 14,000 workers have been secured for farmers by the FSA under the migrant work rules put into effect last September, the FSA officials said, declaring it had been possible to secure workers to meet all contracts.

At present it was said, the work is slightly behind in Florida because so much shifting of plans was necessitated by recent freezes.

Secretary Wickard has asked $85,000,000 to enlarge and continue his migrant work plans. Approximately 400,000 workers would be recruited under its provisions for this harvest. These would include 50,000 Mexicans.

Only in a few places throughout the country, it was said yesterday, has the prevailing farm wage been found to be lower than the 30 cents per hour required by FSA. Farmers contracting for the labor have to guarantee employment wages for at least 75 per cent of the time of the contract.

'Lame-Duck' Opposition Loses

By Robert De Vore
Post Staff Writer

Republican "freshmen" staged an anti-Roosevelt uprising on the floor of the Senate yesterday but they failed to rally more than a score of votes against the nomination of Harry H. Schwartz, "lame duck" Senator from Wyoming and 100 per cent New Dealer, to be a member of the National Mediation Board.

They flung the gage of battle into the face of the Administration, but all their oratory brought them was 20 votes against confirmation, 46 for it.

Eight older Republican Senators voted with a solid block of Democrats to confirm Schwartz.

Earlier, the Senate confirmed without debate the nomination of another new member of the board, William M. Leiserson of Ohio.

The Republican "freshmen" clearly drew this issue: Their mandate from the people in the November elections was opposition to domestic policies of the New Deal.

Schwartz is an avowed New Dealer for whose devotion President Roosevelt is now making "political payment" by appointment to the Railway Mediation Board. The result is perpetuation in public office of a partisan of policies the people repudiated.

That was the argument that caused the veteran Democratic Leader Barkley of Kentucky to wonder whence came what he called a "belated, holier-than-thou attitude" of opposition to lame ducks.

Barkley said that if he had time he might have prepared a list of lame duck nominations that clearly would demonstrate that appointment of defeated elective officials "is not a partisan habit."

Abraham Lincoln was a lame duck at one time during his political career, said Barkley. The late William Howard Taft was defeated for President, yet that did not bar him from service as Chief Justice of the United States.

Retired Supreme Court Justice George Sutherland also was nominated as a lame duck, he continued.

Leaders in the fight on Schwartz were Senators Wherry of Nebraska, Robertson of Wyoming and Moore who defeated Senator Lee in Oklahoma.

Wherry leaped up when Guffey of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, predicted that the Keystone State would elect another Democrat to succeed Senator Davis (Republican) in 1944.

Wherry counseled Guffey not to be too sure about that. Wherry shouted: "We've come down here as new Senators with a mandate. And what is that? To oppose the New Deal."

Robertson quoted from Schwartz's campaign platform in 1936 and 1942: "I will support him (Mr. Roosevelt) blindly" and "I have been a rubber stamp for the President for six years and I offer myself again as a rubber stamp for the ensuing six years."

Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat) of Wyoming defended his former colleague as a "man of ability," but Senator Moore put the Republicans back on the track with:

"Again we are asked to confirm another ex-officio holder with the type of mind that will be controlled with the proposition that 'the king can do no wrong.'"

3 District Men Suffer Wounds In North Africa

Three Washington men are among 368 United States soldiers wounded in action in North Africa since early November, the War Department announced yesterday. The list, reported to next of kin, includes men who have already recovered and returned to duty.

Local men named were: Col. William Chamberlayne Bentley, Jr., 39, husband of Mrs. Barbara Greene Bentley of 1817 Twenty-third Street Northwest.

Pvt. Henry H. Dodge, 24, son of Mr. and Mrs. William M. C. Dodge of 1887 Monroe Street Northwest.

Pvt. Robert Lee Russell, 23, son of Mrs. Florence Knight of 3225 Volta Place Northwest, who was first announced as a war casualty on February 19.

Was Attache in Rome

A senior pilot with the Army Air Corps, Bentley was assistant military and air attache in Rome, Italy, from January, 1940, until April, 1941, when he was ordered to leave by the Italian government. He was afterwards made military attache in Tangier.

Born in Richmond, Va., Bentley attended John Marshall High School, Virginia Military Institute, the University of Richmond and the University of Virginia.

He was a member of the Virginia National Guard for four years, receiving a second lieutenant's commission in the reserve in May, 1928, and transferred to the Air Corps Reserve in June, 1928. As a civilian, he worked at San Antonio Air Depot and Knox (Indiana) Airport for brief periods. In February, 1929, he went on active duty with the Second Bombardment Group at Langley Field, where he was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Regular Army the following May.

Graduated at Brooks Field

Bentley was graduated from the flying school at Brooks Field, Texas, in June, 1930, and was rated an airplane pilot after graduation at Kelly Field in October, 1930. He remained at the latter field as an engineering officer until February, 1931, when he was ordered to Wheeler Field, Hawaii. After three years' service in Hawaii, he returned to the United States and was stationed at Langley Field until his assignment to Rome.

Private Dodge, a native of Haymarket, Va., has been a District resident for 13 years and attended local schools including John Eaton, Force, John Quincy Adams and Western High. He was an employee of Armour & Co. until his induction into the Army October, 1941.

Overseas in May

After training at Camp Wheeler, Ga.; Fort Knox, Ky.; and Fort Dix, N. J., Dodge was sent overseas in May, 1942. He was stationed in Ireland and Scotland before being transferred to North Africa.

His parents received word from him in December that he had suffered five wounds in the North African landing and was quartered in three hospitals, French, civilian and United States Army. A letter delivered Monday of this week included reports that he was feeling well and had received Christmas packages and a large bundle of mail from home.

Also on the list are three Virginia men: Pvt. First Class Roy W. Deskin of Marvin, Pvt. First Class Glenwood M. Dodson of Boyce and Pvt. Bill Ward of Newport News.

Maryland men included are: Staff Sgt. Maynard Carp of La Plata, Pvt. Arthur M. Cayer and Pvt. First Class Matthew Rzegocki, both of Baltimore.

German radio in a broadcast recorded by the Associated Press said a five-hour fire in Bangkok, capital of Japanese-occupied Thailand, destroyed a quarter of the city last night.

Upwards of 500 houses, mainly wooden and corrugated iron shacks, were wiped out, the broadcast said. The Chinese owner of a weaving works where the fire was said to have started because of "carelessness," was reported to have fled.

Sedition Cases Rise 203%, Berge Reports

Assistant Attorney General Wendell Berge, describing the work in the criminal division of the Department of Justice told members of the Federal Bar Association yesterday that complaints of destruction of war material, Berge said, it is agent registration cases and treason cases had increased as much as 203 per cent this fiscal year over last.

Berge, speaking at a luncheon in the Harrington Hotel, declared similar comparison could be made with respect to practically all of our criminal matters growing out of the war, and that "there does not seem to be any letup in sight."

In complaints involving destruction of war materials, sedition, for is always difficult to distinguish between cases of true sabotage and mere malice, so these cases should be handled with the greatest of caution.

Considerable emphasis was given by Berge to the now developing War Security Act which will complement existing laws "which have left great gaps, as was demonstrated by the case of the Nazi saboteurs, who were tried recently and condemned to death."

Authentic Hitler

Once again Adolf Hitler has found it expedient to make a speech by proxy. This fact is certain to revive the rumors that he is dead. Yet the tone and tenor and substance of the proclamation read for him at a party congress in Munich Wednesday were indubitably his. The Hitler touch is evident throughout—the fantastically swollen egoism, the brutalitarian fanaticism, the insensate megalomania. Who but Hitler would have had the effrontery to declare that "today, too, I am inspired by the same will power to resolve to the last consequence the task which fate has entrusted to me"? And to add: "I have a right to believe that destiny has chosen me to fulfill this task." Who but Hitler would have given as his prescription for the mounting difficulties on the German home front that the Nazis "break terror with tenfold terror"? And he was fully himself when, after stating that "the German people will mobilize and use their forces to an extent exceeding that in any war in history," he could declare that Germany will not "scruple about foreign lives at a time when such hard sacrifices are exacted from our own life."

A regime founded on oppression and terrorism now plans to maintain itself by intensifying the tactics it has employed throughout this war. All Europe is to be made the shield behind which the Fuehrer and his fellow gangsters plan to take cover in an effort to save their vile skins. This is to be expected. It is of the nature of the beast the United Nations are fighting. But the question arises whether the time has not come to make it clear to the German people that the longer they continue to stand behind Hitler, the less will they deserve mercy. They must choose and choose quickly, therefore, whether they are to serve any longer as accomplices of the most monstrous and inhuman regime ever seen in history, or by their continued acquiescence prove that German and Nazi are interchangeable terms.

Kasserine Pass

The retreat of Marshal Rommel's forces to a point east of the Kasserine Pass removes, perhaps permanently, the serious threat which developed last week to Allied bases and communication lines in western Tunisia. It is now apparent that this time as when, with a very much larger force, he menaced Alexandria, Rommel lacked the force speedily and effectively to capitalize advantages he had acquired through tactical skill. American losses in men and equipment, while heavy, were speedily made good. When the test came our troops proved equal to the task before them. As Secretary Stimson has pointed out, our ground forces "not only have stood their ground unbroken, but came back with a vigor that was surprising to the Germans."

In addition to driving Rommel out of the Kasserine Pass the Allies are now also menacing Sbeitla and Ousselita to the northwest. And with each passing day the British Eighth Army comes closer to the main body of Rommel's troops. Already the advance units are within the Tunisian zone, thus suggesting that it may not be long before an Allied drive on the Axis strong points in eastern Tunisia from the northwest, the center and the south will be launched. The new situation in Tunisia is undoubtedly encouraging. But the point we have made before must constantly be repeated. The elimination of the Axis from Tunisia will prove no picnic. Recent developments have underlined the certainty of an ultimate victory, but the fight is going to be hard.

Rooms For Girls

The margin between rooms available and rooms needed for girl defense workers in Washington is becoming dangerously narrow because householders and landlords prefer to rent to men. The reasons are obvious. Girls need facilities for light laundry, pressing, entertaining, etc., which men do not require. In peacetime this preference did not matter much, since there were many vacant rooms, and those with space to let found it was necessary to rent to men or women without distinction. Now, however, many available rooms are in homes where the income from rental is not regarded as worth unnecessary trouble. In the interest of his own convenience, therefore, the householder is stipulating that he will take men tenants, or none at all. This means that single girls, already denied apartments by many establishments which will take only married couples or families, also find suitable rooms increasingly hard to get. And yet the satisfactory housing of these girls is necessary to our war effort. If the existing preference system were abandoned, the community might avoid the setting up of a billeting mechanism at a time when services and funds are badly needed for a myriad of other defense tasks.

Toward A Breakdown

Congress has been very critical of the way in which Manpower Chief McNutt is apportioning the obligation of Americans to work or to fight. It has had reason to be critical. Mr. McNutt was slow in formulating his program and when he did take decisive action, some of his policies appeared to lack congressional authorization. But why should Congress take a merely negative attitude and block the only efforts that are being made to place workers where their services are most needed? That is precisely what the House Appropriations Committee has done in slashing from a deficiency bill $2,454,000 to save the United States Employment Service from complete demoralization.

The Employment Service must necessarily be the backbone of any plan to allocate manpower in accord with the demands of total war. It is the only Federal agency with any experience in the field of recruiting and placing men in industrial jobs. In the critical war-boom areas the USES has been directed to take control over all hiring so as to shift the diminishing number of men available for war work to plants where the need for manpower is most acute. Yet the House Appropriations Committee has voted to scuttle this service. If Congress should sustain the committee in its reckless action, a collapse of the Employment Service may be unavoidable.

Last year the USES lost 70 per cent of its own personnel. Nor does that appalling turnover tell the whole story. The exodus from USES jobs is naturally greatest in the areas where the demand for new workers is heaviest. Some of the States in which war industries are concentrated have witnessed a turnover of as much as 170 per cent in USES staffs within a year. In the big cities of those States the rate is still higher. In other words, the Employment Service has the greatest difficulty in holding its own employees in those sections where its services are needed most.

The reasons for this disintegration of the WMC's chief operating agency are well known. Although the USES has been federalized for the duration, employees know that the law calls for their return to State control when the war is over. In effect, then, they must serve two masters—the Federal Government and the States. Much more important, however, is the fact that their salaries in many cases, being adjusted to State salary levels, are far below the compensation granted to other Federal employees or to industrial workers. If Congress definitely refuses to correct this discrimination, all the USES employees who have clung to their jobs in the expectation of fair play from their Government may be expected to quit, with disastrous results.

The seriousness of that prospect is underlined by the fact that it is now virtually impossible for this right hand of the WMC to recruit new employees for its own organization. About 15 per cent of the authorized jobs in the USES now go begging. They cannot be filled at the salaries now paid. Maryland found, however, that by raising the pay of USES personnel in that State, the turnover could be virtually stopped. Many former employees returned to their old jobs after the higher salaries were voted.

It is time for Congress to make up its mind what it wants of the WMC. At present it is criticizing that agency for what it is trying to do while at the same time denying Mr. McNutt the tools he needs to work with. That negative attitude doesn't make sense. We believe that Congress cannot begin too soon to work out a comprehensive manpower policy of its own. In the meantime, however, it would be suicidal to strike down the only agency which shows any promise of being able to give orderly direction to the movement of men and women into essential war work.

Troops On The Farm

The Army, it appears, is not going on a cotton-picking expedition in Arizona. An investigation shows that most of the cotton has already been picked. Farmers whose crops have not been gathered would probably rather worry along with such civilian labor as they can get, moreover, than to have a battalion of soldiers turned loose in their fields. In any event the outcome is a partial triumph for the principle of keeping the right man in the right place.

It appears, however, that this proposed foray of the Army into agriculture was part of a general program for the emergency use of troops on farms suffering a shortage of manpower. President Roosevelt hinted recently that such a program was in the making. Now there are reports that an agreement for such use of troops has been reached with the War Department. Indeed, Lieut. Gen. Joseph T. McNarney, Deputy Chief of Staff, is reported to have told a Senate committee that "you can have 50 men or a million" for farm work, if necessary.

That may appear to be a generous concession to farmers crying for more manpower. But this question naturally arises: If the Army can spare a million men for emergency farm work, why aren't some of these men who know how to farm sent back to their jobs in an effort to forestall the food crisis that is now facing us and our allies? In no circumstances can troops take the place of skilled farm labor. Most soldiers would be a flop at picking cotton, milking cows, or harvesting grain. The same objection arises, of course, to the recruiting of women, high school children, and old men from villages for farm work. Farmers need men who can drive and repair tractors and other machinery—men who have the know-how of farming. Moreover, they want to know whether competent help is going to be available to them before they agree to expand their crops in accord with the national requirements.

To speak of using the Army to make up for the shortages of manpower on the farm thus tends to cloud the issue. In some cases emergency use of troops to gather in a crop may be a welcome alternative to letting it rot in the fields. But if this dubious expedient should divert attention from the basic problem of getting real farmers back on the land, it would be far more dangerous than beneficial.

Finnish Peace

Amid rumors and denials of rumors the situation of Finland has become an enigma inside a puzzle. Only two things seem to be sure. The Finns are war-weary, and to a greater or less degree they are prisoners of the German occupation. This dilemma may account for the caution exhibited in Helsinki when Finn leaders are questioned about the authenticity or otherwise of the "peace feelers." Only a Russian push in the north could extricate the Finns from their dilemma. It is said that there are already six or more Nazi divisions in northern Finland. If the Russians, moving from Leningrad, should succeed in cutting the Germans off, then the Finns would be free to talk peace with the Russians.

The problem would then be the terms upon which the Russians would be prepared to negotiate. Recently a Pravda article mentioned Russia's Baltic claims, but not a word was said about Finland. This was taken as a sign that Russia was prepared to discuss Finland's frontiers. What frontiers? When the Finns took up arms for a second time against Russia, they hoped at least that they could push their frontier back to the old line existing in Karelia before the first Finnish-Russian war. Some of the more ardent nationalists hoped, indeed, that they might get a slice, if not all, of Russian Karelia. Both expectations must have been upset by the turn in the tide of war in Russia's favor.

Yet the very fact that Nazi militarism is destined to go down to defeat should logically govern Russia's attitude toward Finland's frontiers. History is now on Russia's side in defining the first war against Finland as a war of defense. Russia feared an attack from Germany. She was vulnerable from Finland, whose frontiers marched to within a few miles of Leningrad. Thus the Russians waged a preventive war against Finland, as the peace terms testified. The Karelian frontier was pushed back, and, by taking over Hangö as a base, the whole of the Gulf of Finland became Russified. It was a peace, in other words, based on fear of Nazi Germany. But the next peace would be negotiated in a situation from which fear of Nazi Germany had been removed. It is the recognition of this fact that Russia's allies will doubtless press upon Moscow as the foundation of a Russo-Finnish settlement.

More Uniforms

The problem of getting essential civilian workers to eschew military service and like it is complicated by the fact that in wartime the same civilian job is apt to pall. Not for the farm worker the possibility of a breastful of medals and badges. He cannot even boast a uniform. The absence of these adornments of service is particularly missed, it is said, by women warworkers, and the War and Navy Departments are considering uniforms for civilian employees as a means of sustaining morale. The voluntary war services have long recognized the morale value of a uniform. In fact, all mankind has long recognized it, as witness the lodge conventions and parades.

But how design a uniform acceptable to the millions of women warworkers? That matter seems to have been well taken care of in the uniforms worn by the women in the auxiliary armed forces. These have met with general approval both from the wearers and the public. Especially is that true of the WAVES' hat, which has received a feminine accolade. "You see it was designed by Mainbocher," women never fail to remind each other in commenting on it. And that's a point plant managers disturbed over the feminine apparel problem might do well to remember. As to the men workers, virtue must remain its own reward, though the laggard effort to dignify war work equally with combat duty may yet bear fruit in inducing less restlessness for martial glory.

FOR A SONG WRITER KILLED IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC—1942

Who so presumptuous as to mourn you, dead?
Or who so blind
But knows you found what you came here to find.
And sees fulfillment in the jungle bed
To you assigned?
You sought the chance to strike one telling blow,
Do one strong thing
To save what you believed worth salvaging.
Dear forthright friend, you came to kill one foe
So folks might sing.

Farm Subsidy
By Mark Sullivan

A Federal Shackle

IN THIS very serious controversy in Washington, involving practically every domestic policy and issue, the factor simplest to understand is the farm one. Because this touches all the other factors, understanding of the farm issue will clarify all.

Begin with the basic fact about which everybody agrees something must be done. This is, a threatened shortage of food. Not a shortage as respects food for our own people, if only that were involved—but a shortage as respects the enormous demands ahead, for our civilian population, our armed forces, the armies of our Allies, and the civil populations of our Allies. The sum of these demands is almost unlimited. With prospects as they are, not all can be adequately met.

Next, the cause. This is, mainly, shortage of labor on farms. Of this, in turn, the causes are two. One is, farmers taken by the draft. This, however, is relatively a minor cause. Of the angry charges by farm spokesmen in Congress, relatively few are against the Army—the Army, and Army officials in charge of the draft, are considered to have been cooperative from the beginning. Lately, the draft mechanism was taken away from the Army and put in charge of Manpower Commissioner McNutt. Because Mr. McNutt's actions about manpower generally have excited opposition, the present outcry against him includes some allusion to the draft. But less than 40 per cent of the shortage of labor on farms, is due to the draft. And Army officials are willing to take any practicable step toward undoing the detriment to farms that has been caused by the draft.

THE REAL CAUSE of the shortage of labor on farms is high wages paid in industry. The way this came about is essential to the story, because farm leaders feel that Administration policies have favored labor, have discriminated against the farmer. This accounts for the political color of the controversy. The counts in the indictment include among many others: The Administration brought about a 40-hour work week—without time and a half pay for hours in excess of 40. The Administration gave contracts for building Army cantonments and other structures only to firms employing union labor. The high wage rates thus brought about drained the farms.

Now as to remedy, about which controversy is violent. The remedy proposed by farm leaders is that farmers, in order to keep their workers and get more, be enabled to pay wages comparable to the rates in industry. This would make wages paid by farmers very high, because of the necessarily longer work week on farms. In order to pay such wages it would be necessary for farmers to get materially higher prices for their crops. And this is specifically the demand of the farm leaders. They demand that prices for crops be put at a figure much higher than at present and that the new prices include specifically the cost of labor, whether performed by farm workers, or by farmers themselves and members of their families.

To this the Administration replies that such a rise in prices of crops would lead toward inflation—because higher cost of food, higher cost of living, would lead at once to yet another demand by labor for still higher wages. This is undoubtedly true.

The remedy proposed by the Administration is that farmers be relieved by direct Government action—mainly by a subsidy. For this purpose the Administration has asked Congress to appropriate 100 million dollars.

TO THIS the reply of the farm leaders is violent opposition. The principal reason they give for their opposition is that a subsidy would be accompanied by still more regimentation. Had the proposal for a subsidy come solely as a wartime device, were it not preceded by things that have gone on for 10 years, the farm leaders would not so violently oppose it. But today, as put by Congressman Leon H. Gavin of Pennsylvania: "The American farmer today wants to be relieved from the restrictions and regulations and regimentation that have been strangling him. Remove the shackles from the American farmer."

This is where the farm issue gears into the whole controversy between Congress and the Administration. Especially does it gear into the proposal in Congress that appointees in the executive branch of Government receiving salaries above a certain figure, be subject to confirmation by the Senate. The feeling in Congress is that there are in the Administration a number of persons having a philosophy of government which, among other effects and methods, would take from the citizen much of his liberty of action, and would transfer much power from the legislative branch of Government to the executive. Such an issue goes very deep.

Air Power In 1943
By Paul Schubert

Smashing The German Home Front

WILL BOMBING crack Germany's home front during 1943? The attempt is being made. For the first time during the war, air power is being used, not in the tentative, limited, experimental way of 1940, 1941 and 1942, but with hammer-blows of great effectiveness.

The blows are being delivered by Britain's Royal Air Force, which uses a technique developed for this particular job—a technique evolved in the hard school of war—with aircraft to fit the technique. The R. A. F. has clung to its purpose with grim persistence, and is being rewarded by a 1943 success all the sweeter because it took so long to attain.

FOR YEARS before the war it seemed certain that bombing would play a major role when the "next war" came. As a matter of fact, dread of bombing caused most powers to develop pretty good defenses against the more obvious bombing attacks, especially against daytime bombing, so that when war did come, bombing proved a good deal of a disappointment. The percentage of bombers shot down was unacceptably high. Small scale bombing proved ineffectual. Even large-scale bombing failed to accomplish its purpose unless followed up by persistent repeat attacks.

The Germans were the first to try the use of air power, in the air blitz delivered against the British Isles during the late summer and autumn of 1940. In the light of present knowledge, it is customary now to disparage the 1940 air blitz as "inadequate" and to criticize the Germans for ending it "too soon."

But by prewar concepts, the 1940 German air attack was on a scale that most air power advocates would have sworn must bring victory. And though it petered out before it had accomplished its purpose, the Germans carried it on until their bomber force had been bled white—they have never recovered from the losses paid as the price of the unsuccessful blitz on Britain.

The 1940 blitz was the first great experiment in the use of pure air power. It was a practical demonstration that air power, if it is to be effective, must be used on a scale so much bigger than anyone had envisioned up to that time, that only the greatest and richest productive powers could afford it. As for Germany, the Nazi Reich apparently decided that the game wasn't worth the candle—"air minded" Germany had done no pure air power attacking since then.

But Germany had presented Britain with information available to no other nation. As a result of the blitz, the British knew more about the actual effects of bombing than any other power. The British were able to chart each German air raid, to estimate quite accurately the number of aircraft used, the number of bombs dropped, the size of bombs employed, and the actual damage caused by each bomb.

The German raids on Britain had failed. But they taught the British, very realistically, how to estimate the size of raids that would not fail—and the frequency of raids needed to make sure the damage was never wholly repaired.

Britain set out, determinedly, to create an air force able to bomb Germany to death.

The basic theory underlying modern bombing is that the attack force must be so large that "ground defenses and defending aircraft are overwhelmed. If 10 bombers are sent over the target, all 10 may be shot down. If 100 are sent over, 15 may be shot down. If 500 are sent over, 25 may be shot down. If a 1000 are sent over, somewhere the number shot down becomes a constant, and after that, if the number of bombers is further increased, the number shot down actually diminishes, because the bomb-devastation blazes the anti-aircraft defenses to extinction.

IN THE same way, a large attacking force can attack many targets, sometimes three or four at a night. This forces the enemy to defend many targets—thereby giving each target thinner protection.

Last year the Royal Air Force worked up the size of mass raids to an effective intensity, using the 1000-plane raid as a "yardstick." But in 1942, mass raids were still "stunts."

This year the R. A. F. is putting on a demonstration of super-bombing that is causing irreparable damage in west and north-west Germany.

Ironically, this may be the first war won by air power—and the last. For air power will certainly change architecture—the factory of the future must be bomb-proof. But the Germany of 1943 is not bomb-proof. Only a few plants and factories can have been moved "underground."

As our air force joins the 1943 attack, the effect should be greater still.

Government Transfers

An amazing machination for slowing up wartime transfers of Federal employees is that part of the Civil Service Commission known as the war transfer section. Created with considerable splash and fanfare, this super red tap bureau of the already bogged-down-with-procedure Civil Service Commission amply illustrates the vast difference in the actions of the commission as contrasted with its almost daily public pronouncements to the effect that it has been eliminating all unnecessary procedures and "reduced paper work to a minimum." This is a joke to the governmental personnel officers who know that where it had formerly been possible to effectuate transfers of Government employees in a few days, war agencies desiring the services of specially equipped persons employed in the Federal agencies now must shift all personnel transactions to this sloppy crew of red tape specialists whose only interest seems to be in perpetuating their jobs through the medium of involvement of super-duper paper procedures.

Since all intergovernmental transfers must now clear through the war transfer office it is easy to see that incalculable harm is being done the war program by the delaying action of this bureau.

Public Responsibility

I was interested in Lillian B. Finkenshaed's letters regarding the serious shortage of domestic help in the Home for Incurables.

The home, says the president of the board, cannot compete with the Government in its standard of wages, hence the employees of the home leave for Government jobs. Well, there's nothing strange about this. Private charity cannot compete with the Government in anything. Which proves more conclusively that the care of incurables should be the job of the Federal Government and not that of private charity.

Isn't the United States rich enough to care for those unfortunate who were probably contributors to the wealth of this country before ill health overtook them? MINNIE WOLFSOHN.

At Napoleon's Tomb

Hitler—This is the place, Benito. Mussolini—Are you sure? Hitler—Of course I'm sure. I was here when the war was big. Mussolini—You made a big mistake in leaving.

Hitler—No wise cracks. Just stand here and see if we get anything.

Mussolini—What do you mean "get anything"?

Hitler—We stand here as great conquerors in the presence of a great conqueror. Maybe we can catch something from his spirit. (After they have stood in quiet a few minutes) Well, do you feel anything?

Mussolini—Just a little more uncomfortable than ever, that's all. Hitler—I seem to feel him trying to say something to us. . . .

Hitler—What makes you think he would speak to us?

Hitler—What makes

Fourth Term Question

By Ernest Lindley

Spirit Of Partisanship Quickens

IN SOME ways it is rather early to indulge in conjecture about a fourth term. Too much can happen between now and the summer and fall of 1944. The war may or may not be over. It may be over in one theater but not in the other. American ideas about the character of the peace may have crystallized, so that a great majority agree on the most important things to be done. They may be separated into two or more sets of ideas which will create political issues. Or they may be thoroughly scattered.

The prevailing view in informed quarters at the present time is that the war against Japan probably will not have been concluded in the summer or fall of 1944, although by then Germany may have surrendered. As each phase of the war is concluded, we will get into the military, diplomatic, and economic questions involved in the reorganization of peace. The chances are that there will be no peace conference, but instead that the victors will gradually work out practical arrangements by a series of agreements and conferences.

A few points about Mr. Roosevelt are open to so little argument that they may be regarded as facts. The first is that he has world-wide prestige which no other American citizen even distantly approaches. Mr. Roosevelt's prestige is of great practical value to the United States in winning the war, and it can be in working out international postwar arrangements. When the Presidency passes to another man, there is almost certain to be at least a temporary loss in American prestige.

SECONDLY, Mr. Roosevelt is more intimately acquainted than anyone else possibly could be with the men and problems which the United States will have to deal with, not only during the war but during the critical early stages of organizing the peace.

Thirdly—although there may be more room for argument here—he is a brilliant military and diplomatic strategist. These are the fields in which the record to date indicates that he is at his best.

These are the principal reasons, I should think, why a great many people would like to see Mr. Roosevelt stay in the White House until the war has been won and the critical early stage of peace-making has passed. In addition, there will be some who want him to run because of his views on domestic policies, and there may well be a widespread feeling in the Democratic Party that no other Democratic candidate has as good a chance of being re-elected.

Without knowing Mr. Roosevelt's inner mind, it is reasonable to assume that he has no desire, as such, to be a fourth-term President. He has had a long, hard grind in the White House. Like other men who have been under terrific unremitting pressure and responsibility, he must long, at times, for a rest.

MOREOVER, as the record stands now and seems likely to unfold, Mr. Roosevelt will be assured of a high place in history—not only because of the changes at home wrought under his leadership but because of his role in repelling and organizing the destruction of the gravest external dangers this country has ever faced. He could quit today and probably still hold some such sort of historical recognition.

Mr. Roosevelt's own attention is concentrated on winning the war. He is also giving thought to means of keeping it won. But he has largely divested himself of domestic political and economic affairs. James F. Byrnes has become a real executive vice-president in charge of the home front. My guess is that, no matter how long he may remain in the White House, Mr. Roosevelt will never again give the detailed attention to home affairs that he did prior to Pearl Harbor. Winning the war and staking out the military, diplomatic and economic framework which will afford some hope of keeping the war won, is the logical climax of Mr. Roosevelt's career. Anything after that would be anticlimactic.

If the major principles to guide American foreign policy after the war should be lifted above party before the 1944 campaign, there would be less reason for Mr. Roosevelt to run again. But the Republican Party has not yet found its ground. It has a big carry-over of pre-Pearl Harbor isolationism. And many of its members of Congress seem to be intent upon dodging firm commitments with respect to foreign policy.

It is unfortunate, in many respects, that the next Presidential election will occur, in all probability, before the war has been won and the critical early stages of peace-making have passed. The mere fact that we are getting closer to another campaign quickens the spirit of partisanship. And whether or not Mr. Roosevelt runs again, there will be a period during 1944 when he is likely to be handicapped by uncertainty as to the outcome of the election. If the Constitution did not prescribe otherwise, about one year after the end of the war would be the logical time for the next election.

New Allied Action Hinted

Canadians Wait Chance

By the Associated Press
London, Feb. 25.—War Minister Sir James Grigg told Commons today he trusted that Lieut. Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton's Canadian troops "will not have to wait much longer" before hurling their massed might against the enemy, and also mentioned army reforms intended to speed the day of attack.

This hint of forthcoming Allied action was balanced with illustrations of the enormous Allied supply problems involved when "the army goes abroad," and was made as Grigg introduced a new army appropriations bill.

"Our Canadian comrades have made many friends amongst us," the war minister said, "but they have been linked at the fact that the chance of engaging themselves in bulk against the enemy has been so long in coming."

"We trust that the will not have to wait much longer, and when their chance does come we know they will acquit themselves bravely and that the mother country, as well as the cause of civilization generally, will have abundant reason to be grateful to them."

Expected to Be Spearhead

Another contingent of Canadian troops landed earlier this month in Britain where thousands have been undergoing training for several years. King George VI recently reviewed these troops, who are expected to spearhead any Allied invasion of Europe.

Some detachments have been sent to North Africa to gather experience for battle instructions to those training here. The most dramatic Canadian role thus far in the war was last summer's assault on Dieppe.

The war minister told the House that 100,000 men in the British army were transferred to "more active work" in 1942.

The British Eighth Army, now closing in on Marshal Rommel's forces in southern Tunisia after advancing across Africa from Egypt, was hailed by Grigg as "the finest instrument of war which so far has been fashioned in the history of the British Empire."

North Africa Invasion

He disclosed that the invasion of French North Africa—launched jointly from Britain and the United States—required the movement in three weeks of 185,000 men, 20,000 vehicles and 220,000 tons of supplies from British camps to embarkation ports.

It took 440 special troop trains, 680 special freight trains and 15,000 freight cars to do the job, he said. Betrayed by the weather, the Allies missed taking Tunisia by only a narrow margin, Grigg said.

Illustrating the size of the task of maintaining British global forces, he said 1,000,000 tons of supplies, 800,000 men and 80,000 tanks, guns and vehicles had been sent around the Cape of Good Hope to various destinations during the past year.

Liquidation Of HOLC Urged As A 'Golden Opportunity'

By the Associated Press

Complete liquidation of the Home Owners Loan Corporation was urged before a joint economy committee yesterday by Senator McKellar (Democrat) of Tennessee, who said the Government had "a golden opportunity" to get out of the home mortgage business now while prices are high.

He and other members of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Non-essential Federal Expenditures requested John H. Fahey, Federal Home Loan bank commissioner, to submit data, including estimated losses if HOLC should dispose of some 30,000 houses it has on hand as a result of foreclosures, and about 780,000 outstanding loans aggregating $1,472,362,000.

McKellar asked Fahey: "Considering the fact that we have had little private building for the past year or two, due to the war, and that you can't get priorities now for building, don't you believe you can get more of the sale of these houses than at any other time?"

The housing official replied that this depends on their age, location, and how they are sold. Put up at auction, he said, they would not bring as much as if sold on time. Fahey said the 30,000 houses represented a book value of about 280 million dollars, and added, "we are in complete agreement with you as to the necessity of disposing of them as quickly as possible without incurring undue losses."

Fahey said 80 per cent of the houses now owned by the corporation are in the Northeast, and that some of them presented difficult sales problems because of their location. Four-family homes in New York City, he said, might be difficult to dispose of without severe losses.

HOLC was set up in 1933 to re-finance the mortgages of distressed homeowners by exchanging its bonds for the mortgages.

The Gallup Poll

U. S. Public Inclined To Feel War With Japs Due to Outlast Hostilities Against Nazis

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Feb. 25.—The whole problem of the length of the war is taking on a sharper note of interest as the presidential election year approaches. Whether or not the war is still going on in 1944 may have an important bearing upon the outcome of the election.

The average American is at the present time a lot more optimistic about the early termination of the war in Europe than he is about the war in the Pacific. A comfortable majority of the voting population expects that it will take a year or less to defeat Germany, while only about a quarter of them think that we can defeat Japan within that period. The layman's prediction on the war's length, while only a guess, reflects morale and the attitude of the people toward the various war measures.

Two hundred and twelve field representatives took the issue before thousands of men and women in all parts of the country as follows:

"How much longer do you think the war with Germany will last?"

"How much longer do you think the war with Japan will last?"

Here is a tabulation of the answers given:

Length of war	Ger-many	Japan
Less than 6 months	5%	1%
6 to 11 months	28	14
1 year	33	16
1 to 2 years	9	16
2 years	14	26
2 to 3 years	1	5
3 years	3	10
3 to 5 years	1	5
5 years or more	1	5
No opinion	5	9

As the figures show, the median average figure on the length of the war with Germany in one year, with Japan two years. Sixty-six per cent look for the end of the war with Germany within a year's time. Only 24 per cent feel that we can defeat Japan within a year. Moreover, 20 per cent believe that it will take at least three years to defeat the Japanese.

Compared with a survey made in November, the present findings reveal a sharp rise in pessimism about the war in the Pacific, for at that time 40 per cent felt that the war with Japan would be ended in a year's time or less.

At the same time, it is interesting to note that the present attitude on the length of the war is consistent with the recently reported majority sentiment which now regards Japan as our chief enemy, rather than Germany.

'Random Harvest' Arrives To Captivate the Capital

Ronald Colman and Greer Garson Supported By Brilliant Cast in Romance at the Palace; Auxiliary Films Augment Superb Feature

"RANDOM HARVEST." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture of the novel by James Hilton, adapted to the screen by Claudine West, George Froeschel and Arthur Wimperis, costarring Ronald Colman and Greer Garson, with Philip Dorn, Susan Peters, Henry Travers, Reginald Owen, Bramwell Fletcher, Rhys Williams, Una O'Connor, Charles Waldron, Elizabeth Risdon, Melville Cooper, Margaret Wycherly, Aubrey Mather, Arthur Aronson, Alan Napier, Jill Esmond, Marta Linden, Ivan Simpson and numerous others. Directed by Mervyn LeRoy. At Loew's Palace Theater.

"RANDOM HARVEST," long and eagerly awaited, yesterday began its first Washington engagement on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater.

In whatever perspective it is viewed, it is a picture beyond reproach, affording discriminating filmgoers a unique opportunity to observe that patience, understanding, tenderness and devotion have not been banished from the human heart and need not be distorted by specious theatricalism to exert an enormous emotional and sympathetic appeal.

As revealed upon the screen, the play is less an example of perfectly articulated drama than a moving and memorable experience in warm and completely believable human relationships, executed with such restraint, delicacy and finesse as to eliminate all thought of "craftsmanship"—as high a tribute as can be paid the art of the theater.

No single element in the superlative excellence of "Random Harvest" is more distinguished than all the rest that enter into the composition of its flawless mosaic. All of the charm and fascination of the original James Hilton story has been preserved by Claudine West, George Froeschel and Arthur Wimperis in a particularly comprehensive and well-knit script. With Ronald Colman and Greer Garson as its costars, the cast brings illumination and strength to even the most obscure of the many roles. Mervyn LeRoy's direction transcends even the most brilliant of his many earlier achievements and to the production Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has brought the full measure of its abundant resources.

Like the same company's "Goodbye, Mr. Chips" and "Mrs. Miniver," the present work offers splendid tribute to the cinema's capacity for "holding a mirror up to nature" and capturing a true and arresting reflection.

The story, primarily, is one of steadfast love, beset by many hardships. At its opening, Charles Rainier is a victim of shell-shock in the First World War, who on Armistice Day wanders out of the hospital, bewildered and all but bereft of articulate speech to express his disoriented and wandering thoughts. On his way to a performance with a touring musical troupe, Paula takes the ailing veteran in tow, conscious that what he needs most is gentleness, patience and sympathetic companionship. Rainier's past is a blank, his real identity lost. But between the two there gradually grows a deep and tender love. They marry, have a son and for three years live an idyllic, if poverty-stricken life, in a quaint little country cottage, where the groping convalescent discovers that he has a possible future as a writer. On his way to an appointment and possible job in Liverpool, he meets with an accident that shatters his amnesia and restores his true place in society—a son of a distinguished house, who becomes an industrial leader of the empire. Again Paula enters his life, not obtrusively or acquisitively, but in the burning hope that something, sometime will link them again in his memory. The ensuing developments have been devised with engrossing skill.

Costars Excel Their Best

The role of Rainier is the perfect assignment for Ronald Colman. It amounts, in point of fact, to a dual impersonation that has been consummated without even a fleeting blemish to mar its perfection. In the early sequences, Colman gives a remarkably realistic impersonation of the man whose mind will not do his bidding, and later contrives with no less effectiveness to bring equal poignance and conviction to the scenes in which a vague and nebulous past begins to merge with his consciousness of the present. It is a brilliant tour de force for the actor.

In the character of Paula, Greer Garson magnifies the depth and sympathy of her performances even as Mrs. Chips and Mrs. Miniver, by bringing complete realization to the greater opportunities placed before her. From the tramping songstress, singing Harry Lauder songs to the huge delight of lower class audiences, to the sensitive, distraught and ever-hopeful wife of the later scenes, Miss Garson's embodiment of the character is one of charm, beauty and utter truth. It is no lugubrious chore that she performs here. There is much of lightness, gaiety and humor in her portrayal, as there is throughout the play, when lightheartedness is inherent in either character or situation.

Among those in the lesser roles, Philip Dorn, as the young psychiatrist; Susan Peters, the youthful niece Rainier was deterred from marrying, almost at the altar, by the first dim glimmerings out of the past; Reginald Owen, the boastful barkeep, and Bramwell Fletcher, helpful in moments of vital need, stand out a little from a roster of principals that is of stellar distinction throughout most of its length.

Although of no consequence in any mind on such a bill, a Defense Reel devoted to "Point Rationing of Food;" "Suffering Cats," an M-G-M cartoon comedy, and the picturized "News of the Day," supplement the feature that so magnificently fortifies Mervyn LeRoy's position among the foremost directors of his day.

HEDDA HOPPER

Most of the Boys Picking Cotten!

Hollywood, Calif., Feb. 25.—Orson Welles started him in "Citizen Kane," but David Selznick is building Joe Cotten into the hottest actor in town.

He lent him to Hitchcock for "Shadow of a Doubt." Joe got rave notices, and now he's wanted by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for "Army Chaplain."

Sam Wood would like him for "Saragat Trunk." Irving Berlin for lead in "This Is the Army," and Hitchcock for "Life Boat."

It's a toss-up between "Army Chaplain" and "This Is the Army," and may the best man win.

Jean Hersholt has received an honorary doctor's degree from Rollins college in Florida. Now he can really be addressed as "Dr. Jean Hersholt Christian."

I don't believe the report that Marlene Dietrich divorced her husband three months ago in Washington, D. C., and no one is prouder of Daughter Maria's success than her mother.

The foursome that other night, which included Marlene, Maria, Jean Gabin, and Richard Haydn, was a farewell to the war. Maria has followed in her mother's footsteps by taking advice of her astrologer, Carol Richter.

Quaint, isn't it?

Red Skelton's contract provides that Metro has the right to take him off the air at its discretion—which explains his wearing that horrible leopard skin in that musical no one cares to remember.

In order to publicize "The Leopard Man," Jean Brooks is going to take a trained leopard on a leash through the country and have it meet the press personally. Reminds me of the time Tom Mix rode Tony into the ballroom of the Astor. Raymond Hitchcock kept a goat in his closet at the Algonquin.

No mention Olga Petrova's in keeping her pet cobra in top of her grand piano. We're really making strides in our profession, what?

Could Change His Mind.

Orson Welles has already said he wouldn't do Nero in "Quo Vadis." I'll bet when he learns how a certain columnist is campaigning against him, he'll change his mind.

Then, too Arthur Hornblow has developed it into a fine story, and who but Orson could do it except Charlie Laughton or Sidney Greenstreet?

Teresa Wright's illness holds up the start of "North Star" only a few days. . . . Walter Brennan, in the same picture, opens it side by side with a pig he's taking to market. Walter told me he's competed with ham many times, but this is the first time he's been in competition with ham on the hoof.

One Fine Fellow

Lynne Overman's passing has left a gap that no one will be able to fill. Lynne was a quiet chap.

When he wanted to be alone, he was. He arranged one room in his home with a ladder leading down from it. When he felt in the mood he went up the ladder, and pulled it up after him. . . . Maureen O'Hara signs her name "Maureen O'Hara Price." Got a big hand at the canteen when she was introduced as the wife of a United States Marine.

Bette Davis cooperating with the Girl Scout council to help get steaks these days. Bette was a Girl Scout herself and has never ceased working for the movement.

Bad Combination

Jean Arthur shuns publicity but is begging for it in "Lady Takes a Chance." She goes to the bar, reads a sign "cactus milk," asks what's in it, and is told it's made of tequila, applejack, and gin. Jean warns everybody that combination is no good off or on the screen. . . . Dorothy Lamour lunching with her fiance, Capt. William Ross Howard 3d, at the Paramount commissary. Gosh! he's handsome.

'The Meanest Man in the World' Is a Minor Item at the Capitol

By Ernest L. Schier

"THE MEANEST MAN IN THE WORLD." A Twentieth-Century Fox picture of a play by George M. Cohan, starring Jack Benny with Priscilla Lane, Rochester, Edmund Gwenn, Matt Briggs, Anne Revere, Margaret Saddon, Helen Reynolds, Don Douglas, Harry Hayden and Arthur Loo. Directed by Sidney Lanfield. At Loew's Capitol Theater.

The new bill at the Capitol Theater this week appears to have been put together on a piecemeal basis. This thought stems mostly from the fact that the feature picture has a running time that compares closely with the numerous short subjects that have been added to give the program the appearance of a full-size bill.

There is, however, in the combined stage and screen offerings a variety of subjects to intrigue the most demanding patron, with the accent on comedy.

Whatever "The Meanest Man in the World" started out to be, it remains a minor incident in the screen career of radio's Jack Benny. There is a well-founded comedy plot, the potentialities of which found full flower when it served as a stage vehicle for the late George M. Cohan. Not so here. Completely ignoring the originality of the theme, the producers have used it only to serve as a background for a romance between Benny and Priscilla Lane, and an exchange of gags between Rochester and his radio employer, most of them highly overworked, based on the difference in their complexions.

Diploma Gathering Dust

The scenario, written by George Seaton and Allan House, has Benny as a small-town lawyer whose legal diploma is gathering dust in an unvisited office while Jack and Priscilla chew their nails at the distant prospect of getting married.

It seems that Benny is too noble-hearted to indulge in the cruel practices which, according to the film, members of the bar must participate in order to survive. Settling off to New York to make good, he runs into the same impasse. Seemingly, there is no other kind of practice available which would not offend our hero. Finally, out of desperation, he takes a job evicting old ladies and

THE GREAT GILDERSLEEVE

Broadway Potpourri

New York, Feb. 25.

Ernst Lubitsch was in Berlin during that period when, as now, the German armies were beginning to crumble. The government-controlled press did not prepare the people for the defeat that was inevitable. Lubitsch and his countrymen hadn't been allowed to read or know of the Marne, or the Argonne. And so, in that fall of 1918, he helped write and produce six shows, all of which had "Victory" finales. . . . Then, overnight, came the startling news of Germany's defeat. This news, however, didn't affect the gross receipts at Lubitsch's shows, for he merely changed the theme of the finales from "Victory" to "Defeat," in which the chorus-lines vowed the rebirth of their nation.

In Hollywood, one summer, Lubitsch became interested in his domestic life. The director vowed vengeance, and prepared for this event by first enrolling in a special boxing-class at Terry Hunt's. For the next few weeks Hunt instructed him in how to jab, uppercut, deliver a right hook, etc. . . . Then came the day of reckoning. It was at a dance given at a Beverly Hills hotel, where Lubitsch saw that young man seated with another fellow. Lubitsch danced his partner across the room, until he reached his target. When the music stopped, the nervous producer swung his right—and kayeed Mary Pickford.

Some newspapermen were telling Ben Hecht of their achievements in crime reporting. Hecht then revealed how one news-beat he scored in Chicago cost him his job for two weeks. The case was that of a girl named Randall, who shot her man and killed him. Hecht rushed to her home, found her four-page diary, and managed to copy those four pages before the coroner impounded the book. A summary of those four pages was published immediately, under Hecht's by-line. . . . The next morning the rival Hearst paper began publishing the Randall "diary," in serial form. It ran for more than a week, pages after pages. Hecht's editor thereupon removed him from the payroll until he could explain how the rival paper could publish such endless excerpts from a document Hecht swore was only four pages long. . . . After two weeks, Ben discovered the truth: William Randolph Hearst, passing through Chicago, had seen Hecht's story and merely was "expounding" on it.

After the Paul Draper-Larry Adler concert at Carnegie Hall, one member of the audience left the auditorium, entered a cab and told the hackie: "Take me to Toots Shor's." The hackie smiled, and started driving towards that restaurant which is the hangout for prizefighters, sports writers, baseball players, etc. "Mister, this is the first time I ever had a call from Carnegie Hall to Toots Shor's," the hackie confessed. "I've had calls from the Polo Grounds to Shor's, from Madison Square Garden to Shor's—but never from Carnegie Hall." "Live and learn, brother, live and learn," replied the passenger. "I'm Mr. Toots Shor."

The State Department at last has given its consent for a group of OWI representatives to go to North Africa. . . . Leo Durocher, the Brooklyn Dodgers' manager, will report for service in the armed forces on March 1. The Draft Board decided to take him. . . . The new Follies Bergeres show here will have a United Nations theme—with 48 girls composed of four Chinese girls, four Russian, four British, four American, four Brazilian, etc. . . . A clergyman of the Russian Orthodox Church at East Ninety-seventh and Madison, now works after hours at the Sperry Gyroscope Co. There too he sometimes has a bishop accompanying him at his war labors.

Mr. Buck Brings Jungle to Pix

If any one is qualified to teach jungle warfare to the men of the United States armed forces, fighting in the tropical reaches of the South Pacific, it is Frank Buck, who for many years has been making forages into the jungles of the world and returning with rare, savage animals whose capture called for steady nerves, daring, and cunning equivalent to any denizen of the untrodden underbrush.

His latest sortie into the wild unknown has taken the "Bring 'Em Back Alive" man into the wilderness of the Amazon jungle where a pictorial record of his adventures was made, and is being, currently released at the Pix Theater under the title of "Jacaré."

It is Jim Dannelsdon, Buck's protegee, who heads the Brazilian expedition in search of the black-skinned, red-eyed man-killer, whose name the film bears. Dannelsdon's safari, brought into camera range for the first time many strange inhabitants of the jungle, which, to all but adventurers, seem to have been dreamed up to reform alcoholics.

Carriers Set 3-Year Highs; Trade Lively

New York, Feb. 25.—Rail stocks continued to climb to new tops for more than three years in today's market on one of the largest turn-overs since late 1941.

While industrials did relatively well from the start, many touching two-year peaks, these were handicapped to some extent by profit cashing on the long upswing. Even the transportations slipped a shade under the best at the close although final plus marks ranged from fractions to around 2 points for favorites.

Women's Club News

By Genevieve Reynolds

Music is a medium of international understanding—a kind of Esperanto—according to Miss Marie Oliver, music secretary of the National Board, Young Women's Christian Association, who left for her home in New York after conferring with local Y. W. C. A. leaders on war-time musical programs.

GENEVIEWE REYNOLDS

"If we have sung the songs of Poland, for instance," she said, "or danced to its gay and vigorous tunes, we begin to feel the quality of its people. And once we have sung or heard the stirring marching songs of the Chinese soldier, the valiant Chinese of today become more understandable to us."

Miss Oliver thinks it is a good idea for war workers especially and people in general to become familiar with the music of other nations. Also, that it will serve a double purpose by releasing wartime tension and giving us a better understanding of other nations.

Outlet in Music
"Girls and women who have been sitting long hours before typewriters or standing on the factory assembly lines, crowd the more than 450 Y. W. C. A.'s of the nation nightly in search of release from the tension of the day," she averred. "Many of them find relaxation most easily in music, either singing together, listening to concerts or practicing the instruments of their choice."

She went on to point out that the demand for an expanded musical program at the local Y. W. C. A. makes it urgent that more musicians be found to serve as volunteers. Leadership in group singing and help in arranging concerts and lectures are the most pressing need.

The music department of the Washington Y. W. C. A., located on the sixth floor of the Seventeenth and K Streets "Y" building, is under the direction of Miss Josephine F. Hamilton.

Voices Meetings

In order to stimulate discussion of current problems on the home front, as well as to meet realistically the present transportation problems, the D. C. League of Women Voters begins its neighborhood meetings at 1:30 p. m. today, "Isolationism" is the general topic of this first meeting. A feature of the discussions will be the recently published quiz of the National League of Women Voters titled, "Am I an Isolationist?"

For the purpose of these meetings the metropolitan area has been divided into ten districts by a committee on neighborhood groups, with Mrs. Wiley Rutledge chairman, assisted by Mrs. Paul Appleby, Mrs. Oscar Chapman, Mrs. Ben McKelway and Mrs. Francis Walters. The meetings will be held at centrally located homes of league members in the various areas. Discussions today will be led by members of the league's foreign policy department under the chairmanship of Mrs. Herbert Hirsche. Others are Mrs. Joseph Ball, Mrs. C. S. Duncan, Mrs. Edward First, Mrs. Walter Laves, Mrs. M. O. Lorenz, Mrs. John Province, Mrs. James Schram, Mrs. Nell Staebler and Miss Zinna Willis.

Mrs. Eugene Callaghan, league president, said: "This action is a further step in the general direction we have been taking for the past year to make effective the purpose of the National League of Women Voters in war-time."

Arouse Public Opinion

"Our aim," she continued, "is to arouse and awaken an intelligent public opinion and to create a greater participation and recognition of responsibility of citizens in government, by extending information pertinent to the protection of our democratic institutions. The board feels that there is a definite need for the league to reach more citizens in the community. The acute transportation problem and lack of household assistance, as well as many war-time activities, make arbitrary the development of neighborhood groups as a technique in carrying out this war-time purpose."

Persons wishing to attend any of these meetings should communicate with the following area chairmen:

Mrs. Edward First (EM. 9401) in Georgetown, Mrs. Robert L. Totten (ML. 5441) in Mount Pleasant, Mrs. Elmer Staats (EM. 0467) in Wesley Heights, Mrs. Ralph E. Coomes (WO. 7188) in Friendship, Mrs. Donald Kennedy (OR. 2355) in Cleveland Park, Mrs. John Parks (AT. 7741) in Southeast Washington, Mrs. Chester S. Williams (OR. 0516) in Chevy Chase, Mrs. Gilbert R. Barnhart (ML. 6446) in the Kalorama Road-Dupont Circle area, Mrs. William Finan (CH. 6078) in Arlington, and Mrs. Wallace D. Brock (TE. 3264) in Alexandria.

Urges More Defense

Immediate and more efficient civilian defense measures in preparation for possible Jap and Nazi suicide attacks on the United States was urged by Mrs. Timman Bacon Parks at yesterday's meeting of the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs. Tuning her remarks to Mrs. Parks' report, Mrs. Charles H. Pierce, second vice president of the federation, made an appeal for auxiliary firemen and policemen to aid in civilian defense work.

Watkins, to take charge of service flag distribution for federation members who have husbands, sons or daughters in the service. Other appointments by the president included those of Mrs. Ross H. Snyder and Mrs. Lee D. Riller to contact Miss Tarpley of the personnel division, OEM, who will furnish names of strangers to the Capital who wish to join Washington clubs.

What Is a 'Well-Balanced' Diet?

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

One of the adjectives used to convey in one word the type of diet we all need is "well-balanced."

Obviously, such a diet needs a little of some foods, a lot of some others, a combination of many. And a good diet is just that.

People are always asking, "What foods are good for one?"

One food may be vitally needed for building up the cells of the body (milk, meat, eggs, fish, cheese, poultry, etc.) Others with no such ability may be indispensable because of their vitamin and mineral contents. Still others may be useful to preserve the heat of the body to develop energy. Some afford lots of calories (especially this latter classification, the heat and energy foods), and some, such as the foods rich in minerals and vitamins, may very well be foods that contain a very small calorie count. But all are essential for just those elements which they can supply most generously.

Mrs. C. J. believes all of these things but she seems powerless to convince a friend whose contention it is that his children can be fed adequately on meat, potatoes and milk.

Admittedly this is a pretty good start, but it leaves out all those foods whose mineral and vitamin contents provide us with the material for healthy teeth and bones and nervous systems. Every one of these, in a sense, a "cooked" food, since we eat meat and potatoes cooked and drink our milk pasteurized. What does your friend think will take the place of the fresh foods with their high vitamin C content, which will prevent his children from developing scurvy? How is he protecting them from rickets with a diet notably lacking in vitamin D when he lives in a climate where sunshine, our natural source of vitamin D, is at a premium for many months of the year?

Even if your friend knows nothing of dietetic values, surely he doesn't think we grow cereals and fruits and vegetables to feed to the animals. We live where such foods are natural to the environment—they are grown for decoration only?

Since he is wrong—as any dietitian would tell him—admit that you too were wrong in your treatment of the feeding problem.

When a child cannot eat and is sent from the table it is because he isn't hungry and not a punishment for disobeying your commands to eat. If, then, he wants to come back and finish his meal there is no excuse to refuse him the privilege, if the food is still on the table.

And One Flew West

By Anne Tedlock Brooks

The story thus far: Judith Nichols, newly licensed flying instructor at Graves Field, is in love with the handsome, devil-may-care pilot, Jinx Atwood. Jinx has confessed his love for her but the confession has interfered little with his attentions to the glamorous Cherry Mason, secretary in the field office at a solo party for the latest crop of student pilots, to which Jinx takes Judith, Eleanor Winslow, sister of the chief instructor, makes a wild exhibition of her own unrequited love for Jinx. Judith is with Hugh McAllister, one of the students, when they see Jinx and Cherry apparently leaving the dance together. Hugh calls to Jinx, saying if he may take her home. Cherry replies quickly that she is going with another man who says "Good night. Even after Jinx takes Judith home and kisses her good night she still is uncertain, and it is after she retires that she realizes Eleanor could not have acted so foolishly about Jinx unless he'd given her reason for thinking their love was mutual.

CHAPTER XIV

Judith had a letter from Jinx during his three-day visit home before starting the students on their secondary course. It came special delivery while she was eating lunch with Jack.

"Darling," it read, "I miss you terribly. My sister had a little party last night but it was dull without you. None of the girls here can compare with my Judy. I'll see you tomorrow night. Keep it free for your devoted Jinx."

Judith's brother looked with interest at the letter and she said, "It's from Jinx, since you seem very concerned." She leaned over and squeezed Jack's hand.

He caught it up and said, "Nice letter, I can tell. Girls are funny, aren't they?"

Judith laughed. "I suppose my face is shouting out that I have a date tomorrow night."

"No, it says 'I'm in love with a man. A man who isn't worth my little finger, but that doesn't matter. Love can be so wonderful.'"

"Do you mean that literally or do you mean all men in general are not worth my little finger?" Jack deliberately puffed on his pipe. "No man's worth your little finger, Judy. But I really wonder if Jinx Atwood in particular is worth your little finger?"

Judith's cheeks whitened and she said, "Jack, how terrible of you!"

Jack stood up and strode across the room thoughtfully. "Judith, I love you and want to protect you. I want you to have the happiness that you deserve, and I must tell you that Jinx Atwood is not very well liked by the men of my acquaintance."

Judith's heart pounded as she said, defensively, "But that doesn't necessarily mean that he isn't nice or that he wouldn't make a good husband."

Jack laughed and softly came to her and pulled her dark head over against him. "Have a good time with him, honey, but don't get serious. Jinx isn't the marrying kind."

"But Jinx has a long time to think about marrying and, besides, he may be called into the Army Air Corps any day."

"I've wondered if that had occurred to you. Oh, well, forget it. I know that you have a good mind inside that pretty head, one which will steer you clear of trouble."

Judith shivered slightly. She forced a laugh and said, "Let's forget all this, Jack, and go on a picnic tonight. Get Janet and I'll call Hugh McAllister. He's been wanting to meet you."

"All right. Shall we take our swimming suits and go to the Old Mill?"

"Swell. I'll get Mrs. Maybree to fry up some chicken and make an angel food."

Hugh McAllister was delighted. He had found time hanging heavily on his hands waiting for the secondary course to begin. He was impatient to finish all of the work that Graves Field offered, so that he could go on into Army training.

As Judith helped pack the big picnic basket, she thought of Hugh as he stood in the dim light of the hallway at the Sinclair's. The strange look that crossed his face after she had kissed him, came back to her clearly. She smiled to herself, wondering what her kiss had meant to him. It had been impulsive, and now she was just a little embarrassed at seeing him this evening.

For a change she decided to

The Gentler Sex

By Marina Lindsay
Criminal at Large

I
Something should be done at once about the nefarious "they." Public enemies Number 1, who need a thorough expose. Where are all these crafty, mysterious fellows who everything upset.

Why haven't they been rounded up in the famous police dragnet?
II
"They" not the war, are to blame for all this rationing mess. "They" are the ones who may cause us all to go dinnerless. Food would be plentiful now, also shoes, gasoline.

If "they" all of these matters had properly overseen.
III
Why did "they" ration food by announcing it in advance? Why did "they" ration shoes with such sudden arrogance? Why didn't "they" manage to keep the boys down on the farm? Why in fact did "they" ever permit Germany to rearm?

IV
Who is to blame, when "our" side loses a battle or ship? Oh, it's not "we" but "they" that have made some fatal slip; Who is responsible for all this production delay? There again the culprit is the incorrigible "they."

V
If "they" knew their business there wouldn't be any factory absentees. If "they'd" looked ahead we'd have steak now instead of cheese. If "they" would get some system into the conduct of this war, Within six weeks "we'd" of the world be conqueror.

VI
"Their" crimes, if listed, would stretch from coast to coast. Of these "their" failure to prepare for war is probably the foremost. "Their" muddled democratic ways have also jammed the works. In fact their whole performance, "our" nature greatly irks.

VII
See what "They've" done in Congress, in the White House, OPA. And how "they're" making the Army and Navy worse each day. And how "they're" handling labor, manpower and WPB, OGD and OWI and all the other agencies!

VIII
"They" should be brought to justice promptly by the FBI. And put away where decency they nevermore could defy. However, here's the rub in executing such decrees. Where'd be the jail to hold us all if the "they's" should turn out "we's"?

Young Lady: 1943

By Jeanne Contini

This is the portrait of a young lady viewing the spring of 1943 with a justifiable mixture of hope, poise and trepidation. Her face expresses what we honestly feel, but are too grown-up to be allowed to show.

Her costume is typical of the period . . . combining charm with sound economy. The coat is pale yellow flannel (part rayon, part wool) as soft and downy as a newly hatched chick. Since the mode currently favors the feminine, the collar has a dainty lingerie edge and there is pretty detailing in the yoke and seams. The buttons are pearl. About $5 will buy it . . . which is just the right amount because she is necessarily uninterested in investing any sizable amount even in a coat because she will have outgrown it next year. Hats are considered essential to a lady's morale. The matching bonnet can be had for $1, and as you will notice, has a flattering frill of white net to frame her face.

The entire costume also comes in navy, pink and powder blue . . . sizes 7 to 14.

How Emotions Can Produce Semblance of Heart Disease

By Logan Clendenen, M. D.

THE HEART has notably been associated with the emotions. When we ordinarily talk about a man's heart we are referring not to the physical disturbances which he might have, but to his emotional and sympathetic reactions. This means, at least, that the heart can be disturbed by psychologic states and that this will often fool the patient and sometimes the doctor into believing that real organic heart disease is present.

Physicians often speak of a "cardiac neurosis," by which they mean a patient who is so upset about his heart or by the actions of his heart that it is difficult to convince him that no serious heart failure is present. These are very difficult patients to treat because it is by no means easy to convince them of this fact. And, indeed, sometimes it almost looks as if organic or at least physiologic heart disease could arise from an upset nervous system. The condition described as "soldier's heart" by Dr. da Costa of Philadelphia during the Civil War and which we called neuro-circulatory asthenia in World War I, was unquestionably due to the interference of the emotions of fear and apprehension with the normal functioning of the heart.

There is a question which certain psychologists have brought up as to whether, in a person who has first an emotional disorder causing functional upset of the heart, such as irregular pulse, with the disturbance continuing for a long time, it isn't possible for structural or organic changes to arise in the heart. There is still another aspect of the situation and it concerns the situation where a person has actual organic heart disease, such as high blood pressure or angina pectoris. The question arises as to what effect emotional storms have on the course and outcome of his disease.

I have recently been shown examples of two patients who exhibited this relationship. One was a man, 45 years of age, who had for several years had symptoms of emotional upset in the form of depression, irritability and restlessness. Then one day he had a severe pain over the heart with a smothering sensation, a sense of pressure in the chest and pain down the left arm.

These symptoms, which were attributed to angina pectoris, were associated with great fear, so that within a short time it was difficult to tell whether he was sicker from his heart or from his emotional state.

Couple Befriend Girl By Taking Her In Their Home To Be One of the Family, After Which Man's Interest In Her and Her Worship of Him Wreck the Marriage

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: After studying your column for some time, I have decided to have you advise me what to do in the following case: Three years ago, when I was 15, I met a young couple who were very nice and I soon developed a deep affection toward them. I used to go to their home to help with the housework, etc., and they would do favors for me in return. Since I enjoyed their company and they enjoyed mine, this led to my staying at their house during all my spare time.

Finally, because of trouble I was having with my family, I was practically forced to move out, and I went to live with them. They promised to buy my school clothes, etc., and treat me like one of their own. In return, I was to mind their little girl. Well, I lived with them for six months, and during this time, without any intention on my part, the husband gradually fell in love with me. He made love to me, telling of his feelings and devotion, with the result that my fondness for him grew into more or less hero-worship. Being so young, I was innocent of the ways and facts of life. However, I realized I should move out, which I did, but I continued to see the husband on the side.

Now I am the sorriest person on earth, for I know I can never heal the grief and hatred brooding about my stupidity, and his also, for I don't feel I should take all the blame. He was older than I, grew up and married and a man of the world. And during my trouble with my family he was very sympathetic and understanding and a great comfort to me, which probably gave me the idea I was in love with him. It was merely infatuation, but I was too dumb to know it. My other friends told me I was making a mistake and would be sorry some day, but I couldn't see it that way.

Well, experience is the best teacher, and I have learned. I finally broke off with him after he had left his wife and joined the Army. And today, of course, she and I are not on speaking terms, and I can't say I blame her. I am sorry that I ever met them, because if I hadn't, the harm would not have been done. He still writes to me, since we broke up, saying how much he loves me and wants me. I know I hurt him when I broke off the friendship, but I thought it best. I can hardly believe that I, who don't want to hurt anybody, have wrecked a home and broken the hearts of the people who were in it.

I have been trying to write the wife, to ask her forgiveness. But I don't know if that's best. What I want to know is—should I write to her? Or just leave things as they are? Am I entirely at fault in this situation? Please give me your opinions. REGRETFUL.

Girl of 15 Knows Right From Wrong

DEAR REGRETFUL: Theoretically, any normally intelligent person who has reached "the age of reason"—which is to say, the age of approximately seven years—supposedly is able to make intuitive distinction between "right" and "wrong," as determined by the standards which prevail in his habitual social environment. So, even though you were only 15 when the destructive "triangle" began to develop—and thus a child, or a "minor," by legal definition—still, we may hold it a psychological truism that you were quite enough to know (as undoubtedly you did know) that you were playing the role of serpent (in every sense of the word) in that young wife's home, from the moment you found yourself avidly encouraging with "worshiping" response for her husband's manifestations or declarations of a "love" interest in you. And that being so, could you honestly deny that you were at least as much to blame as he was—in promoting a "home-wrecking" state of affairs? Certainly by the time you had left his home, you "knew what the score was," and in continuing to see him by stealth thereafter you voluntarily (and, as theologians say, "with consent of the will") subscribed to manifest wrong-doing, in the form of "love piracy," which was plainly victimizing the woman who had been your compassionate and cooperative friend.

When you finally "broke" with him it was simply because you had ceased to regard him as desirable—either as patron, sweetheart or prospective husband—wasn't it? I suppose of the two persons, husband and wife, the latter is the far worthier character; a fact which you now clearly realize, since the fire of infatuation has run its course with you—so that today you are "kicking yourself" for having forfeited her respect and devotion (for having earned, indeed, her wrath and contempt), in process of satisfying a transitory yen to "make love" with her husband, whom you have found to be a repugnant weak and timorous individual. "With consent of the will," as you would like either to do something, by way of amends, or adopt some attitude toward the situation, past and present, that will take the sting out of your remorseful estimate of your misbehavior.

Don't Confuse Cause With Occasion, However

Well, my view of the episode is this: Although you knowingly went against your conscience in pursuing a dishonorable course of action, which appears to have precipitated disastrous results, it is probable that you were not basically the "cause" of the broken home. It would be incorrect to say that you were the "occasion." The cause had to do with the man's weakness of character and his wife's lack of vigilant wisdom. Obviously he was predisposed to philander, and little concerned with considerations of high principle, honor, loyalty, moral responsibility, etc.—else he would not have addressed himself to a young girl who had sought sanctuary under his roof, at the invitation of his wife and himself. And obviously his wife failed to note the nature and extent of his frailty, and was not on guard (as a wiser wife would have been) to stay off temptations while helping him to grow toward monogamous maturity of being. So it is likely that sooner or later the marriage would have come to grief in the manner described, even if your path had never crossed theirs. Thus, I must say that you are by no means "entirely at fault" for the tragedy. You can only blame yourself for having figured in it.

As to whether to write the wife, asking her forgiveness—my feeling is that it would be extremely indiscreet to put anything confessional in writing, concerning your part in the home-wrecking intrigue; since, in the hands of a woman who presumably hates you for injury done her, it could become a perennial threat to your reputation, long after you might otherwise have outgrown and lived down that piece of youthful folly. Also, it occurs to me that perhaps the most character-strengthening form of expiation you can make for the selfish "double-cross" you gave her, is to silently accept her harshest judgment of your performance, while resolving to "let this be a lesson" to you in future, never to besmirch your record again. MEMO TO MISS BROWN

SUBJECT:

Furlough Fun

Is your favorite (or even second best) serviceman due to arrive in town this weekend with a very few dollars in his khaki (or navy blue) pocket? Unless you have set aside a special fund for entertaining visitors, you may be frantically searching for a way to occupy his precious furlough time without undue strain on his shortened purse strings.

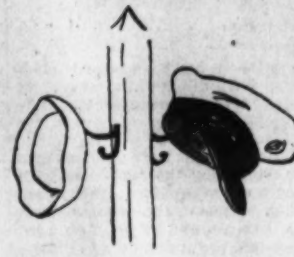

It's not at all smart to flutter your fortune before his eyes or to thrust $5 bills into his unwilling hand when the dinner-and-dance check amounts to $6.74. Man's pride is a delicate thing and does not always take kindly to such contributions, however well camouflaged. So cook up some inexpensive fun which his finances can take standing up instead of becoming involved in the personal loan business.

First of all, if he is a stranger here himself, he may not know quite where to rest his weary head on Saturday night—so solve this problem for him by mentioning that he can stay at many service clubs free—or at some for 50 cents (with Sunday breakfast adding a mere quarter). Give him the number to call (EXecutive 2532) Saturday afternoon, and he can get first-class, first-hand information on what's available where.

Sightseeing

Having taken care of the first problem, you can go on by dropping hints about what you'd really rather do than anything. And there's quite a choice, depending on his disposition.

Why not start Saturday off with a tour of the city—the gang meets in the rotunda of the National Gallery of Art at 3 p. m. (promptly) and closes with supper and a party—which you can take or leave.

After supper there are dances by the score—with refreshments. Try the one at the Y. W. C. A. for instance, where there are three good orchestras for the small fee of 25 cents per person. Or the Phyllis Wheatley "Y" (901 Rhode Island Avenue), where Negro servicemen, with or without dates, are welcome. That same priceless telephone number (EXecutive 2532) will give you more information on places and times.

If he is more on the athletic than the graceful side, suggest a little bowling with the Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church duckpin-ers at Lafayette alleys, S. This costs the usual tariff—but with a mob there is more laughter and fewer games involved.

If his bunions won't take such strenuous play, or if he studied Spanish in high school, get excited about the Mexican motion picture, "Bajo El Cielo De Mexico," which will be shown at Pierce Hall, Fifteenth and Harvard Streets Northwest, at 8 this Saturday. He will swell with pride as he translates the jokes to you, who, of course, think he is so brilliant.

Or get dreamy-eyed in the beautiful interior of the Washington Chapel, Sixteenth and Columbia Road, from 8 p. m. on, as you listen to organ and voice music (for free).

Come Sunday morning, be an early bird and lure him out to the service at the Franciscan Monastery. Afterward you can roam about the beautiful gardens and be metaphysical about the story of St. Francis. This can lead to beautiful conversations about life and even love.

You should be back in town in time for a hamburger and a try at the roller skating party at Servicemen's Club, No. 1 (306 Ninth Street Northwest—1:30 p. m.)—or one of the many "coffee hours" at churches. Call DE-catur 3132 some day this week for details on the latter.

Or, if it's a breathtaking day, go to the Zoo the monkeys never fail to break any ice that may have formed. There's a restaurant on the grounds, too, and bus service is available right down to the cages.

As for supper (which you will probably be crying for about this time), try arranging in advance for one of the many "group" suppers which you help prepare. For example, at Sixth Presbyterian Church, Sixteenth and Kennedy Street Northwest (not too far from the Zoo, either), you can begin showing off your cooking skill at 5:45 and the price is determined by the cooks themselves. Call Stella Brooks at Randolph 4533 by Friday night for reservations.

If you haven't thought up some entertainment for Sunday evening, there's the Y. W. C. A. open house until 9 p. m., complete with ping-pong tables, open fireplace, piano, victrola and food (on a small scale).

So there you are—and I'll bet he hasn't spent all of the few dollars he had when he came.

If you haven't a serviceman handy, then start out this schedule alone for with one friend—more than two girls in a group is usually fatal) and no doubt you'll find a kindred spirit at the tour or a USO dance who would be only too happy to take up the program from there on.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kane

So you have found a little red hat and are saving up for it? Good! There's nothing like a new bonnet to perk up a woman's spirits—just as long as it doesn't mean going without adequate meals.

The working girl has the reputation of being better dressed than fed. A lot of you come close to qualifying as fashion experts. You don't have the least trouble spotting the styles that will be smart next season, or the materials that stand wear and tear.

But what about the foods that help you to stand the wear and tear? The meal you might most be breakfast. Some of you never eat it! And I'm afraid the majority of you who do eat breakfast try to get by with a sweet roll and coffee. Any food is better than none. But if you want 11 o'clock in the morning to mark a high energy level instead of a let-down, you'll start out with a good meal—fruit juice, an egg and whole-wheat toast or a whole-grain cereal with milk, and coffee.

Lunch is apt to be another lopsided, carbohydrate meal. If it is, there goes your 3 o'clock energy peak! Just when you should be going strong you will feel like the end of the day. Of course, you don't want a heavy meal that would slow you down. But you do need foods that stay by you and give you the energy for your work. You can have a sandwich, a glass of milk and fruit, or order the day's "special," some protein dish—meat, fish, eggs or cheese—a vegetable, beverage and light dessert. Either of those lunches is nutritious and less expensive than malnutrition.

It's no saving to buy meals that are so inadequate they send you into a slump twice a day. You have to give good nutrition its due. Maybe you are making more money than you were. Use some of it for the food that lets you get a kick out of your work. I hear you are going in for expensive perfumes. That's all right, too. If a really luxury perfume is something you have always longed for, you should have it. But put nutrition first.

If you are making the same salary, it's harder for you. Proportionately more of your earnings have to go into food—and you have your eye on a guy new print, too! But there's no dress created that can pick you up when you are malnourished.

Whatever your job, you are working harder and you are under greater strain today. We all are. So have three good meals a day, every day. Always have a green vegetable or a yellow vegetable. Now that butter isn't so plentiful, these sources of Vitamin A have taken on added importance. Have two fruits, one a citrus fruit or tomato juice; an egg, a serving of meat, fish, fowl or cheese; two glasses of milk and whole-grain or enriched bread. You can't get along without that last.

Now . . . More Than Ever . . . Buy Quality

Red Cross Appeal to Reach Millions via Quiz Broadcast

By Roland Nicholson

The gentleman's name is Dan Golenpaul; he gets sometimes as much as 24,000 letters a week, has received five million or more since May 17, 1938, and he thinks Information Please is the best radio show in the business. He should. It's his show.

And Golenpaul doesn't need any press agent. Yesterday, preparatory to receiving the press at the Mayflower Hotel, he concocted a winner in the way of a buildup for the Red Cross benefit of Information Please come next Monday night, March 1, in Constitution Hall.

Reporters espied Capt. Oscar J. Lehman, commanding officer of the Third Precinct, as they entered Golenpaul's room. When everybody was comfortably seated, the captain, a very pleasant fellow, made a speech in the course of which he presented a business-like blackjack to Mr. Golenpaul, saying that if Washington had to be blackjacked into buying tickets to the Monday night broadcast, well and good, let the city be blackjacked, but he hoped it wouldn't be necessary.

Almost Overwhelming

It was Golenpaul's happy mission, at this point, to report that Washington wouldn't have to be blackjacked; that its response to the ticket sale at Constitution Hall had been little less than overwhelming. He declined the blackjack, the captain sat down, and everybody was happy.

The show will gross about $10,000, every nickel of which goes to the Red Cross.

But this, in Golenpaul's mind, is small potatoes, indeed. Its chief achievement, said the tall, curly-haired, fast-thinking radio impresario, will be to bring home to the 15 million people who weekly dial in Information Please—he calls it radio's most literate audience, and as far there has been none to challenge his estimate—the appeal of the Red Cross' need for funds.

Corny Program Promised

Monday night the public ear, see for itself why the show has been such a recordbreaker. And, in addition to seeing the regular show, you'll be allowed to sit in on a lot more that the audience won't know about.

Golenpaul promises that the pre-entertainment bill will be the corniest vaudeville program, featuring big names, every arranged. Oscar Levant will play the piano; John Kieran will do a piece or so on his accordion; Representative Will Rogers, Jr., the guest expert for that night, will do a rope trick, and Franklin P. Adams will beat out a tune with a pencil on his teeth. And if Adams doesn't do just that, Golenpaul says you can sue him.

The broadcast starts at 10:30 p.m., the pre-entertainment program at 9:45 p.m.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

Paris Bankers Sent Money to North Africa

GRADUALLY more details of the State Department's policy of cooperating with Vichy bankers in leaking out and unfortunately it does not make good reading.

Latest untold chapter is how the big bankers in Paris knew in advance all about the American landing in North Africa and transferred their funds there to the tune of 25 billion francs or 350 million dollars. Then, after sneaking this sum out of France, the French bankers, with the aid of their friend United States Minister Robert Murphy, brought pressure to raise the exchange rate on the franc.

Finally they succeeded. This simple transaction increased the holdings of the State Department's banking friends to $25 million dollars.

The story seems almost unbelievable, but here are the sordid details.

Ever since the fall of France, Germany has been taking over valuable property from the Jews, labor unions, and refugees who had fled from occupied countries. In doing this, the Germans obviously were preparing for a long-term, throttle-hold on France, so they went about it very carefully.

Apparently they wanted to avoid litigation in French courts after the war so they arranged these deals through certain French banks. The Jewish, labor unions and refugee property was ordered taken over and given to the banks. Then the Germans bought the property from the banks, paying in francs. However, the francs were taken out of the "Occupation France" which the Bank of France paid to Germany every day, for the cost of occupation; so actually these deals did not cost the Nazis anything.

Huge French Profits

THE FRENCH bankers were permitted to keep the purchase price of the property, so they amassed huge profits, and it was these profits which were transferred to North Africa before the American landing.

The banks doing business with the Germans were The Banque de Paris et de Pays Bas, the Banque de l'Indo-China and the Banque Worms.

Despite their close cooperation with Germany, apparently these bankers knew in advance that United States troops were going to land in North Africa. How they knew this military secret in ample time to send their money to Algeria—though the United States Cabinet did not know it until a few days before—has not been definitely established on this side of the Atlantic.

However, certain circumstantial facts are significant. The charming and naive Robert Murphy, had as his close friend Jacques Lemaigre-Dubreuil, head of the French Association of Taxpayers, a big business lobbyist—financed by many of these bankers. Lemaigre-Dubreuil worked hand in glove with the Comité des Forges, or steel trust, which had property in Austria and Axis countries. He had led the Fascist disturbances in Paris in 1934, shared the same political philosophy of these German collaborating bankers, and was close to them.

Strangely enough it was Lemaigre-Dubreuil whom Murphy chose to handle his contacts for the invasion of North Africa. It was he who picked General Giraud, arranged to get him to North Africa in disguise, and who was Murphy's key man in this vitally important operation.

How much Lemaigre-Dubreuil told his banker friends in Paris about our military plans is his secret, but it is an incontrovertible fact that they moved their 25 billion franc profits, wrong from unfortunate Jews and labor unions, to North Africa shortly before the United States landing.

French Banking Lobby

AFTER United States troops landed, the State, War and Treasury Departments had agreed to keep the exchange rate at 75 francs for 1. Whereupon the French bankers immediately launched a lobbying campaign to peg the franc at 50 to the dollar. Obviously this would greatly enhance the 25-billion-franc nest-egg they had sneaked out of Paris.

Strangely enough the bankers received vigorous support from the naive Bob Murphy. His argument was that in Free French Africa to the south, the franc was pegged at 50 to the dollar, so it should not be 75 to the dollar in North Africa.

However, Washington had fixed the 75 franc rate in Algiers and Morocco because the Germans had made the franc much weaker in this area, while they had not been able to weaken the franc in Free French Africa.

The Treasury is supposed to govern United States financial policy. But in this case, Mr. Murphy went to bat so vigorously for his French banking friends that eventually he got hold of President Roosevelt in Casablanca and the White House issued an order fixing the rate at 80 francs to the dollar.

Overnight, the French banking clique which had profited from the forced sale of Jewish and labor union property, had their 25-billion-franc nest egg increased in value from 350 million dollars to 525 million dollars.

Capital Chaff

IT was shortly after Louisiana's Senator Ellender telephoned Louisiana's Supreme Court Justice Archie Higgins that he was sure to be appointed to the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, that F. D. R. appointed Texas' Jimmy Allred to that judgeship. . . . It looks as if Judge Higgins might now run for Governor of Louisiana. . . .

Jim Farley thinks the Republicans will pick Governor Bricker of Ohio as their nominee. Jim himself is partial to Senator Scott Lucas of Illinois as the Democratic candidate, but he doesn't count out Henry Wallace, Jimmy Byrnes, Paul McNutt, or even—Jim Farley. . . . A delegation from the Democratic National Committee will call on F. D. R. March 2 along with Frank Walker to discuss the moot question of rewarding more Democrats instead of more Republicans—which the committee says has been the White House practice in the past. This question nearly blew the lid off the recent Chicago meeting of the Democratic National Committee and it was decided to send a delegation to talk it over with the "Chief."

Martha Ellyn's Platter Chatter

Baked salmon with sour cream and fresh green peas, served on buttered toast or corn bread squares on an attractive platter is an appealing dish. Any other fish that you can catch at the market may also be presented in this way.

Changes are coming into our lives with great rapidity. Adjustments and more adjustments are necessary. But the problem at hand is surmountable. Every possible resource will have to be put into play to keep nutrition in our meals and monotony on the run.

The budget system of allocating points will prove the most effective.

Martha Ellyn in the long run. To make sure that the 48 points will stretch through the period, careful planning will be necessary. If it isn't practical to roughly plan meals for the entire period, then at least plan a week's meals, using no more than a fair share of the 48 points.

When a recipe is given in this column for lemon meringue pie, we often get counterattacks such as, "It isn't possible to make pie when it takes 1½ cups of sugar." Yes, but it is possible. The sugar allotment is adequate for the average cook. Anyone who is at all resourceful can get along.

At the bottom of the sugar bucket is near, then use honey or sirup as the sweetening agent. There will always be some who do not want to meet the issues or try to get along. Usually such thinking comes from those who wouldn't know if a tart is made in a skillet atop the stove or baked in an oven.

Desserts appeal to most persons as a meal like a new hat does to a woman—gives a mental pickup. The sugar and other ingredients, such as fruit, nuts, eggs continued in a dessert are also furnishing necessary nutrition. So if sugar is used in a dessert, it is not necessarily being an "extra" food.

It isn't possible to give suggestions that will be applicable to all families without some adjustments. There is a vast difference in the influencing factors—ages of persons, occupations, incomes—and whims. But in this column we try to give suggestions for the use of such foods as we believe is a fair representation for the average family.

Since meat is scarce we are suggesting fish in today's column. There will be those who will say they can't get fish. Well, there is a wonderful supply of fish as close as the wharves. Here are some of the fish found today:

Black sea bass . . . 25 cents pound
Fillet of sole . . . 50 cents pound
Halibut . . . 35 cents pound
Red snapper . . . 35 cents pound
Rock fish . . . 40 cents pound
Salmon . . . 50 cents pound
Silver trout . . . 20 cents pound

BAKED HALIBUT

Cut gashes in top of 2-pound slice of halibut, insert a narrow strip of fat salt pork in each gash. Place on fish sheet in dripping pan, sprinkle with salt and pepper and dredge with flour. Cover bottom of pan with water, add 1 sprig parsley, 1 slice onion, 2 slices carrot cut in pieces, and bay leaf. Bake 50 minutes in moderate oven (350 degrees), basting with ¼ cup butter and liquor in pan. Serves six.

BAKED RED SNAPPER

Have 3-pounds red snapper cleaned, but leave on head and tail. Cut ¼ pound salt pork into slender ribbons and dip each ribbon in mixture of ½ teaspoon minced thyme, ¼ teaspoon minced bay leaf, 1 teaspoon minced parsley, ¼ teaspoon ground cloves, ¼ teaspoon ground allspice. Using a larding needle, lard the fish with the salt pork. Season with salt and pepper, rub with butter, lay in pan and pour 2 cups white wine over. Bake in medium oven, basting frequently.

If it has been pineapple upside-down cake that has been a favorite "dessert" in your family, then you will have to offer them something in lieu of that goodness. With two cans of pineapple calling for 48 ration food points, you won't be buying pineapple. But if you make an equally appealing dessert, the pineapple yen can be shelved until better shopping days.

Bananas show up in the market about once a week. I saw lovely ones today for 9 cents a pound. The average is about 3 bananas to a pound. So a banana dessert won't be such a luxury. Here's a recipe for Banana Cream Pie:

BANANA CREAM PIE

Combine ½ cup sugar, 5 tablespoons flour and ¼ teaspoon salt in top of double boiler. Add 2 cups milk slowly, mixing thoroughly. Cook over rapidly boiling water until well thickened, stirring constantly. Cook 10 minutes longer, stirring occasionally. Stir small amount of hot mixture into 2 egg yolks slightly beaten, then pour back into remaining, hot mixture while beating vigorously. Cook 1 minute longer. Remove from heat and add 1 tablespoon butter and ½ teaspoon vanilla extract. Cool. Peel and slice 3 ripe bananas into baked pie shell and cover immediately with filling. Top with meringue.

Apples are also in the stores now. Many a delicious dessert can be made from this fruit. The average person enjoys baked apples. Make them using maple sirup and spices and you will have a dish that will be so flavormore, that some of the other favorite desserts requiring canned fruit will be forgotten. A recipe for baking apples with maple sirup follows:

BAKED APPLES

Select firm, medium-sized apples. Wipe and core. Put in a baking dish and fill cavities with maple sirup and spice. Allow ½ cup maple sirup and ¼ teaspoon cinnamon or nutmeg to 8 apples. If nutmeg is used, a few drops lemon juice and few gratings from rind of lemon to each apple are an improvement. Cover bottom of dish with boiling water and bake in hot oven (400 degrees) until soft, basting often with sirup in dish. Serve hot or cold with cream. Many prefer to pare apples before baking. When this is done, core before paring, that fruit may keep in shape.

Report That Hans Thomsen Is New Nazi Envoy At Stockholm Followed With Special Interest Here; He's One of Hitler's Shrewdest Henchmen

With more than passing interest a number of Washingtonians yesterday read reports of a Berlin radio announcement that Dr. Hans Thomsen, former German Charge d'Affaires here, had arrived at Stockholm as the new German Minister to Sweden.

DR. HANS THOMSEN

Those of us who knew the Nazi diplomat and his wife during the years he was on duty here, are still wondering how we allowed ourselves to be fooled about them so long, and why a few loyal friends, even up to the very day the Thomsons set sail for their homeland, continued to defend him; to insist, heatedly, "I tell you, poor Hans Thomsen has no real sympathy with Hitler! It's such a shame he has to go back to Germany at this time. He loves America."

Proof of that "love" hit headlines around the world shortly after he arrived in Berlin and gave a broadcast in which he lambasted our country and our leaders in no uncertain terms. And the fact he has been appointed envoy to Sweden, a country whose continued neutrality is highly important to Germany, adds another link in the proof that Thomsen has been hand-in-glove with Hitler all along.

I wonder what has happened to Frau Thomsen? Radio reports have carried no recent news of the woman who was one of Washington's most attractive diplomatic hostesses back in the prewar days. A brown-eyed, auburn-haired beauty who talked incessantly and—so most of us thought—far too much for her own safety, she was regarded with mixed feelings of pity and suspicion. But she was popular, regardless.

First time I ever saw her—and then I had no idea who she was—was in my own office. She dropped in quite casually one afternoon; wanted to know if I would write a little piece about her pet squirrel. It was lost again; yes, again, she said in plaintive tones. Would I, please, be so kind as to write about it? Perhaps, then, somebody might help her find it.

Expressed Self Freely About Hitler

The idea of doing a Winnie-the-Pooh piece about a pet squirrel, lost or otherwise, had no enticement for me. I suggested that an advertisement in the lost and found column might be more useful. Frau Thomsen's brown eyes filled with tears. She was so sorry, so very, very sorry to have bothered me. But that little squirrel was so dear to her, and she did so want to get it back . . . somehow . . . somehow . . .

In the three years after that, when I got to know her rather well, she talked of many other things. With amazing frankness, she openly criticized Hitler and his henchmen; said some of her own relatives were in Nazi concentration camps; declared that her one hope in life was that she would never have to return to Germany. On certain occasions she wept, her small frame shaking violently, as she talked about what Hitler had done to the people of Germany; and how she hated him. Before long, many of us who knew her well had developed a sort of maternally protective feeling about her. We refrained from repeating anything she said, lest reports should reach Germany and her life would be endangered. Most of us took it for granted that she was a bit unbalanced about the situation, but we were confident that she was completely sincere and anti-Nazi. Even after rumors began to ripple that there was more than a modicum of method in her madness, and that her attitude about Hitler was assumed for the purpose of gaining confidences and tapping sources of American opinion.

Propaganda in Small, Dangerous Doses

Meanwhile, personable Hans Thomsen was doing some very effective spade work on his own. At small off-the-record dinners which he and his wife gave two or three times a week, he dispensed isolationist propaganda in small but impressive doses. He dropped broad hints that Germany had no designs on any part of the Western Hemisphere. He repeated anti-British jokes, and he listened avidly to reports that the British Ambassador, at that time Sir Ronald Lindsay and his American-born wife, were making more enemies than friends for the British Empire.

As German-American relationships became more strained, Herr and Frau Thomsen virtually dropped out of the social picture, but rumors about them continued to float freely around Washington tea tables. There was gossip that Frau Thomsen was pining away; that Herr Thomsen was morose; that a divorce between the two was in the offing because she could not bear the idea of ever having to return to Germany. The latter report got into the newspapers. Frau Thomsen categorically denied the story; said she would go with her husband if he were recalled; that the idea there had been any talk of divorce between them was "ridiculous . . . insane . . . nonsense."

We Should Know Better, Now

When the two joined other enemy aliens at White Sulphur Springs some months later, Washington gossip still had it that "poor Herr and Frau Thomsen would give anything if they could stay in this country . . . neither has any use for Hitler."

But when the diplomatic exchange ship Drottningholm headed across the Atlantic early last May, both were on board and appeared to be happy about it. Shortly after he arrived in Berlin, Thomsen received Hitler's Knight's Cross of War Service with the citation "for special services rendered as a diplomatic representative of the Reich." And today, as Thomsen takes over his duties in Stockholm, and continues his career as probably one of Hitler's shrewdest diplomats, dozens of Washingtonians are wondering how they ever could have been so glib about him.

Timely Personalities

Care Used In Choosing Hostesses

Practically a feminine branch of the Selective Service System is the process through which go hostesses for the Saturday night dances recently begun for officers of the United Nations, the next to take place Saturday at the Sulgrave Club.

Girls invited to be hostesses are chosen by a rigid selection process by a committee composed of young Washington women—some Government employees, some comparative ladies of leisure—on the basis of interesting backgrounds, interest in the service, charm, good looks and dancing ability.

Many come from service or diplomatic families and speak one or more foreign languages. Others are from various sections of this country, able to exchange "back home" chatter with the officer guests.

In addition to the hostesses, the ranks of dancing partners are increased by officers who bring their own dates—in which case "couple" tickets must be bought in advance at the Officers' Service Club in the Burlington Hotel.

Following the dance at the Sulgrave Club Saturday, other locations are at the Mayflower Hotel March 6 and the Willard Hotel March 13.

Monthly Dance To Be Held for Medical Officers

Young medical officers of the armed forces, stationed in and around Washington, will be honor guests at a buffet supper and dance to be given Saturday night by the Women's Auxiliary of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia.

The affairs, which take place monthly, are held at the Medical Society Building. Supper will be served at 6 o'clock and dancing will continue until 12.

They were also guests of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Howard on board their yacht off Florida waters. Mr. and Mrs. Howard, who usually spend the winter in Nassau, are living on their boat instead. Mrs. Howard is the founder of the American Mercantile Marine Library Association.

Paul Xavier English—

VMI Graduate Is Head of CWS Industries

This is another in a series of stories about the men who are running the war. The next will appear on Monday.

By Patricia Grady

In a job that takes brains, muscles and stamina, Brig. Gen. Paul Xavier English is the man that fills the bill.

This burly, mercurial officer took over the responsibilities of procurement and production for the Chemical Warfare Service at the beginning of the national emergency and is still directing its growth and accomplishments. As chief of the Industrial Service, he is charged with the investigation, development and manufacture of all smoke and incendiary materials, all toxic gases and all gas-defense appliances.

He's the man that sees to it that the incendiaries that fill the bomb bays of our American planes will do the most damage possible, that our soldiers are equipped with the most modern of gas protectors, that, if the necessity arises, we will have the deadliest of gases for retaliatory measures.

"Morale is just another word for understanding," says the No. 1 production man of the CWS with characteristic vigor. "We haven't had any labor trouble in our plants. If some misunderstanding is brewing, I go to the plant, talk to the men, try to straighten out problems before they arise. American labor is wonderful. If they understand a situation they'll cooperate to the greatest possible extent."

Peace by Understanding

"We try to show them just what place their job plays in the war picture," he continues. "We all want to be in on the war and we want to see the effect of what we're doing. You can't expect to get along with anybody unless you have a chance to tell each other what you're thinking."

This enormous officer, who still looks like the football player he was in his VMI days, likes to get out to the plants and see for himself how the work is going. He'll listen to all advice before making a

Gas Raid Here Not Probable, Says Officer

V. M. I. as his Alma Mater. It was during his undergraduate years that he developed his great love of sports. Football is his favorite but he is a fan for anything and everything athletic—even 6-da, bicycle races. He used to play golf in the low eighties, but he has only had his clubs out twice in the last four years.

After his graduation in 1911, General English spent two years as Commandant of the Horner Military School in Oxford, N. C., before accepting a commission in the Army in 1913. He saw service near the Mexican border—on one occasion he took part in a chase after Pancho Villa—and was in the Canal Zone when the war broke out. He transferred to the Chemical Warfare Service in 1924 and had his first duty in that service at Edgewood Arsenal.

He was graduated from the Command and General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., in 1927 and his superiors decided that he had all the makings of a good industrial officer. He was made chief of the Manufacturing and Supply Division at headquarters in Washington and in 1932 entered the Army War College.

Planned Island Strategy

The Philippines were General English's post from 1938 to 1939. While there he helped to plot the withdrawal strategy in the event of an overpowering attack. Says he of the battle for the Philippines and the withdrawal to Bataan and Corregidor, "It was like watching a play you'd helped to write."

Back in this country, he became chief of the Manufacturing and Supply Division and then Executive Officer, Office of the Chief. In July, 1941, he became the first chief of the newly organized Industrial Service.

With his wife and son, who is in his last year of high school, General English lives a quiet hard-working life in the Capital. His 17-year old son will follow his father's footsteps this year by enrolling at V. M. I. "He'd rather go into the Army right away," says his father. "There's nothing wrong with the boys of this generation. They're rarin' to go."

decision but once made, he is adamant about it. His officers know that if they make a mistake, the general will tell them about it in no uncertain terms. But once the blow-up is finished, he forgets about it entirely.

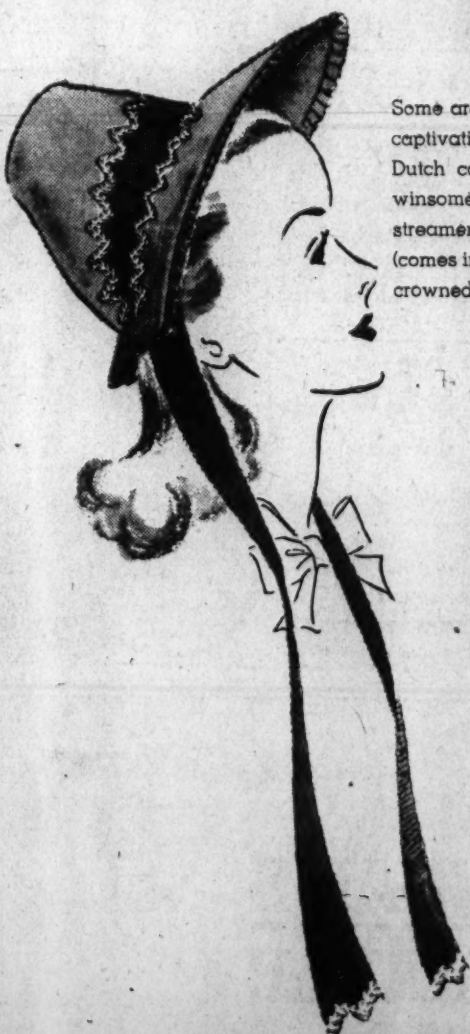

"I don't anticipate a gas raid on our civilian population in the near future," comments General English. "But you never know what to expect from man's dogs. The most important thing to remember in the event of a gas raid, is to get as high as you can. Diving into a basement is the worst thing you can do. Gas, being heavier than air, sinks to the lowest levels."

General English is a good, earthy speaker. His remarks, depending on the company, are usually on the rough and ready side as he has no patience with flowery phrases but deals in actualities. His office is run like a football team, with the capable general doing most of the ball carrying. Once a week, he gathers his staff together for a let-down-your-hair meeting. Here plans are mapped out for the following week, with General English seeing to it that everyone has the signals straight. These huddles, which now take place Monday night, used to be held Sunday mornings. They became famous as "General English's prayer meetings," but I was admitted that they entailed a good deal more cursing than praying.

The youngest of nine children of an old Virginia family, General English was born in Richmond and followed the Southern tradition of choosing

Helpful Hints for Service Wives in 'Army-Navy Woman'

Magazine Established to Aid Wives of Men New in Service

The current issue of Army and Navy Woman, published by the wives of the old guard to give help to the new, carries a picture of a face familiar to Washington. It's Genevieve Forbes Herriek, former newspaper woman, who is now with the Women's Division of the War Savings Staff, and Mrs. Herriek is proud to announce that Army and Navy wives are doing a splendid and enthusiastic job of selling war bonds.

This informative little magazine was organized under the auspices of the Infantry School Women's Club, at Fort Benning, Ga., and the Women's Defense League of Macomb, Ga. It now includes participating memberships from half a hundred Army and Navy centers scattered throughout the country. The Army and Navy Woman is designed to bring practical aid and comfort to the service wife in her new role as economic head of the household.

It includes among other articles a legal department, a "Searchlight Column" with names of service wives whose addresses have been requested by readers; and various other features, all of particular interest to Army and Navy women.

There is one called "The USO Scrap Book and What They Mean," which gives a hint that all may follow. Most of us remember many a weary period spent waiting in an office for someone, such as a doctor or dentist. And then, just as we got interested in a story in a magazine it said, "Continued in the next issue," and we found that it was a 3-year-old copy and there was no next issue extant.

Well, men in the USO clubs or company day rooms have the same trouble. They settle down for an evening of reading and the place is full of odd issues of magazines filled with "continued in our next" stories. Well, the idea is for wives, daughters, sweethearts, and any others with a bit of spare time on their hands to collect their old magazines in successive issues; to cull therefrom complete "continued" stories, and paste them all in one scrapbook, thereby doing several jobs at once. It will occupy time that you might otherwise give over to war jitters; it will give many soldiers a comfortable and satisfied evening of reading; and you will therefore keep them from having the war nerves they might otherwise develop from worrying about an unfinished story.

Wife of OCD Head Has Wide Range Of Interests

Problem of the Washington war worker—the girl who came to town as a stranger and had to live on a limited salary—was a chief concern of Mrs. Roosevelt some time ago when she called together informally the wives of Cabinet officers and the wives of heads of war agencies to discuss what could be done about the matter.

In that group was Mrs. James Landis, wife of the high-tensioned Director of Civilian Defense; and since then, she has taken an extremely active interest in putting into effect a very successful plan to make the lives of "Government girls" from all over the country more pleasant in Washington.

They Combed Town For Right Place

The project itself was worked out along highly skillful lines. Meetings of the war workers themselves were held departmentally. They were asked to make recommendations. The idea of a simple home life, a club and a meeting place carried high approval. Then Mrs. Landis and a number of other activists got busy. They began combing the town for deserted manses which civic-minded persons might be willing to offer as a clubhouse. Generous Evalyn Walsh McLean offered the large old stable to Walsh House. It could be used as a reception center for Government workers on the condition that it could be functioning by Christmas (at that time, only three weeks off).

"She was so right," said Mrs. Landis in an interview the other day. "We knew then that we had to get the place ready by a certain time, and everyone worked amazingly hard."

Energetic Mrs. McLean and Mrs. Landis, who obviously knows no obstacles, devoted endless hours toward cleaning, building, repairing and repainting. On Christmas Day, the Walsh Club for War Workers opened—complete with juke box, radios, bath rooms and kitchen.

Declines to Take Credit for Club

Handsome Mrs. Landis, who speaks with a soft accent, characteristically declines to take the credit for the enterprise. She makes it clear that no one person actually is entitled to take credit for making the project a success. As chairman of the committee on club centers for war workers, she is now concerned with organizing more clubs of the same type throughout the city. And right now, she and other members of the committee are searching, and praying, for other civic-minded, war-conscious, and generous Mrs. McLeans.

The Walsh Club now has a membership of over 300 people. The membership fee of 25 cents a month goes toward the upkeep of the clubhouse. Mrs. Landis estimates that over 4000 war workers have already been in and out of the club. Working closely with the District of Columbia Recreation Department, which provides two competent hostesses each night, the young war workers run their own club. There are membership and entertainment committees. "The club is open every week night from 4 until 11, on Saturday night until 12, and on Sunday from noon until midnight," Mrs. Landis remarked as she showed me the spacious rooms, the modern electrical equipment and the amazing Victorian furniture. We had a fine time inspecting the kitchen, but found a bare cupboard as far as utensils went. Mrs. Landis, who is a very persuasive person, glanced back and said, "I know, we do need utensils and crockery; I do hope people will give us some." Mrs. Landis will have her crockery, probably more than is needed before she is through. I am sure.

As wife of one of the hardest-working and busiest men in Washington and as a former newswoman and traveler, Mrs.

Mrs. James Landis

MRS. JAMES LANDIS

James Landis has had, on her own a colorful life. She abandoned a promising writing career (having junketed about all over the world ghost writing for E. W. Scripps of the Scripps-Howard papers) to become the wife of Jim Landis, then Justice Brandeis' secretary. For many years they have shuttled back and forth between Washington and Cambridge, where Landis taught contracts and ultimately became dean of the Harvard Law School. In 1934, Mr. Landis was a member of the Federal Trade Commission; later he became chairman of the SEC, so that Washington life is nothing at all novel to Mrs. Landis, who always accompanies him. She enjoys the excitement and stimulation of wartime Washington, but frankly admits that the Harvard academic life is the "most delightful in the world." The Landis house in Cambridge was always the gathering place for the liberal and independent young thinkers from the law school and elsewhere, who felt that they could air their views freely and could enjoy an exchange of good ideas.

Mrs. Landis admits that her prodigious husband and her children are her first interest. Refreshingly enough, in these days when women take great pride in disagreeing loudly with their husbands' political views, Mrs. Landis admits frankly that she and her husband are in complete political accord; she is an ardent New Dealer.

Having traveled all over the world, Mrs. Landis is one of those rare people who has been to Guadalcanal. "It is really very amusing, for when I used to discuss my travels to the Solomons, New Guinea and other remote places, friends would smile and politely say in bored tones, 'Um hum.' Now I am constantly pressed with questions on all sides. 'I remember Guadalcanal as frightfully hot, with the fiercest natives I had ever seen in real life or in pictures,' she added.

Funds Authorized For Commodity Price Probe Here

The Senate yesterday authorized the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to make an investigation of commodity prices in the District of Columbia, appropriating $1000 for the purpose.

The resolution was introduced by Senator Gerald P. Nye, who asserted that the investigation would be conducted with a view toward determining how prices paid by consumers for food and other farm commodities compare with prices received by farmers.

The investigation will disclose the price spread, Nye said, and will enable the public to understand the problems confronting the farmer.
